As for our homeless people here in Alaska, some of them feel like they could not live in their own hometown for some reason or another, and some are just down on their luck. Regardless of the reason, they are still human beings, and a lot of them do have some type of skill that they are good at. Just because they are down on their luck doesn't mean they are less worthy then anyone else, it just means they need help along the way. Folks shouldn't be looking down on their fellow man;,instead they should be thinking of ways they might be able to help them. Remember, even just a hug can make a person feel good or even just listening to them.

Now that winter is upon us, please dress warmer. When folks don't, they just harm themselves. Once a person gets frostbite or pneumonia then it is much easier for them to get it again. So stay safe. Take care y' all. Happy holidays!

As always, Karen Nanouk Unalakleet, AK 99684

House committee on fisheries hears from angry subsistence users

By Diana Haecker

A day before the Alaska Federation of Natives main convention started, the State's House of Representatives' special committee on fisheries held a meeting on salmon management in the Arctic-Yukon-Kuskokwim region. Nome area fishermen and representatives from local organizations gave the legislators and Alaska Department of Fish and Game officials an earful about the lack of fish returning, the hardship of subsistence users while commercial fisheries are allowed to take large amounts of salmon as bycatch out of the water.

The meeting, chaired by Fairbanks Representative Steve Thompson, started with the Alaska Dept. of Fish and Game managers giving presentations. According to ADF&G officials, there are 12 stocks of concern, four of them in the AYK region. The AYK stocks of concerns have gone down from nine in 2000 to four in 2011.

Out of the four, three concern chum salmon in Norton Sound subdistricts and one is concerned with king salmon in the Norton Sound subdistricts 5 and 6.

The remaining stock of concern is Chinook in the Yukon River.

ADF&G numbers show that the state funds 15 projects in the Yukon with almost $2.2 million. In the Norton Sound region, funding is much less —$506,000 for 12 projects.

John Linderman, AYK regional supervisor of commercial fisheries, testified for ADF&G and said that the department does not know why the salmon are not returning to their home rivers. "We don't have the answer to the decline of Yukon River Chinook. A lot of what we see is driven by the marine environment and it's difficult to get information in that kind of environment," Linderman said.

In the Nome area, chum haven't returned in numbers for an adequate commercial harvest and at one time went into a Tier II, the most restrictive fishing designation. That is nothing new to locals.

Rose Fosdick, vice president of the Natural Resources Division at Kawerak Inc. gave invited testimony and requested funds from the state legislature for research and restoration efforts through the Alaska Sustainable Salmon fund.

Fosdick also demanded respect for the local people and the right to subsist off the land and the sea. She said that Inupiaq, Yupik and St. Lawrence Yupik cultures and traditions are based on hunting, fishing and living off the land. "We want to maintain our subsistence practices and prefer subsistence foods over store-bought food," Fosdick said. "Our culture is not disposable or replaceable, our subsistence needs are no less important than offshore commercial fisheries."

Fosdick pointed out that the National Marine Fisheries Service's made it a first priority to meet spawning escapement goals and once met, the first priority then is to assure subsistence priority. However, she said, despite this, the mandated subsistence priority is not met.

"Commercial fishing interests have been consistently favored by government fisheries managers on state and federal levels," she said. Commercial Pollock fishing trawlers intercept salmon as bycatch and prevent the fish from returning to their home rivers to spawn.

In Nome, the chum season starts with a closure and Fosdick said, regional ADF&G managers are basically out of options to preserve the chum stocks. "The burden must be shared with False Pass sockeye fishermen and the Pollock industry," Fosdick said.

Given the dismal numbers of returns, Fosdick said that filing an Endangered Species Act petition would be an option. She requested that ADF&G fund research for the AYK sustainable Salmon Initiative, that the department solicit rural Alaskans' input and to set meaningful bycatch numbers for both the federally managed Pollock fishery and the state managed False Pass sockeye fishery.

Testimony after testimony showed that people are getting impatient. Timothy Andrew, representing the Association of Village Council Presidents, which represents most of the lower Yukon and upper Kuskokwim Rivers, said that they are salmon dependent people. "Within the most recent three years, the return fell near or below minimum amount necessary for subsistence," Andrew said. "In the state's presentation I didn't hear anything about the amount necessary for subsistence."

He added that in the next year, it's not likely that they can depend on fish runs to feed their families. Karen Gillis with the Bering Sea Fisheries Association said that there are massive knowledge gaps and that fishery managers need to improve their connection to rural Native residents. She pleaded for local voices in the process to come up with solutions

"Our fishermen are having a hard time," Orville Huntington from Huslia said. He said that he's been a commercial salmon fisherman for many years, but out of concern for salmon stocks, he let his commercial fisher license sunset this year and only fished for subsistence. "I've gone to the federal government, Senators Murkowski, Begich, Akaka and Inouye, and all they tell me is to try the best you can without asking for money," Huntingon said.

Louie Green, Jr. from Nome was present to testify and said that the warning flags of declining salmon went up a long time ago. "But our concerns fell on deaf ears," Green, said. Green said that Tier II has not improved the situation and that he is baffled by the local ADF&G management style. "Local managers allow you to take part in the fishery before salmon get up the river, then when escapement numbers aren't reached, they shut them down on emergency order. To me that's upside down," Green said.

Green criticized the local Community Development Quota group to pay Alaska Fish and Game to count fish. "Fish and Game has an oilfield up there," Green said, wondering why ADF&G has to be supported by Norton Sound Economic Development when NSEDC's money should flow into community development instead of into state coffers.

Green argued that one way to get the salmon going again would be investing into science and a smallscale enhancement project such as the Hobson Creek "hatchery", started by fisherman Tim Smith.

Smith testified via telephone and began his testimony saying that when listening to the department's presentation he thought he was living in a parallel universe. "We have no useful information as to what is causing the shortages," he said.

Smith went on to say that he manages the Hobson Creek hatchery and that despite producing healthy fry, he was denied an ADF&G permit to collect eggs. "And I don't understand, why," Smith said.

Roy Ashenfelter, Northern Norton Sound advisory committee chair, testified to the effect that commercial fisheries are allowed to curtail subsistence fishing. "We don't hear anything from the governor or from the commissioner about that atrocity," Ashenfelter said. "When are you going to ask the department to do their job?"

Fred Alexie, Sr. from Kaltag was present to ask for increased sonar monitoring to collect data from upriver areas like Bishop Mountain and Eagle. "The distance from the sonar station to Kaltag is too great. How do we know where fish from Pilot Station are going?

"This summer we had a five-day closure right at the peak of the Chinook run," Alexie said. "In all my years of fishing, I've never seen it that bad."

Rep. Alan Austerman then said that comments are directed at ADF&G and that the hearing has highlighted a lot of things known in the AYK area. "I listen to the amount of dollars spent on research and I am wondering, where does that take us?" Austerman said.

"I am just as frustrated as the people who testified today. We should give the department notification that we do want to see stronger answers to what is happening and what it is going to take," Austerman said in closing.

Committee chair Steve Thompson ended the meeting with the words, "Commissioner Campbell, Mr. Regnart and Mr. Linderman, I hope you took note. This will be followed up in January, when we will have more talks."

Nome fares solid at Bush Brawl

By Stephen Palmatier

In what was the third invitational for the Nome Nanooks wrestling squad and perhaps their toughest competition yet, Nome finished in a strong third place this weekend at the Bush Brawl Wrestling Invitational held in Kotzebue. Finishing with a total point score of 154.5, Nome turned in one of its best team results of the season thus far, and only fell to Dillingham with 198.5 and the winner and host of the invitational, Kotzebue, with a score of 230.0 points.

Over the weekend, there were 13 different weight classes in which Nome took home two of the titles. The two titles came from Emery Booshu in the 120 pound weight class and Gabe Cabrera in the 126 pound weight class. These two titles tied three other teams with the same amount of winners and was less only than second place finisher Dillingham, who had five title winners for different weight classes.

Besides a few champions for Nome, the reason for their team's success in the tournament this weekend was their consistency of finishers. They had four other competitors finish in second place for their weight classes, which was matched only by Kotzebue. These four wrestlers included Dion Williams, Alex Grey, Jason Gilder and Chris Harvey.

The other winners in each weight class were Kenneth Savo from Dillingham in the 106 weight class, Brettlyn Reich of Kotzebue in the 113 class, Jared Miller of Dillingham in the 132 class, Douglas O'Hara of Kotzebue in the 138 class, Mario Kugo of Bethel in the 145 class, Gabe Simple of Galena in the 152 class, Trevour Chavez of Bethel in the 160 weight class, Macaelin Fiensburg of Dillingham in the 170 weight class, Kendall Alvarado of Dillingham in the 182 class, Thomas Hoseth of Dillingham in the 195 weight class, and finally Mishael Angaiak of Galena in the 220 weight class.

One interesting note from the tournament was that in every weight class that had player rankings, which was 10 out of the 13 classes, the #1 seeded player in their class eventually went on to win the title in the tournament.

The Nanooks look to build off a good weekend as they continue their season when they head to Anchorage for the ACS Invitational this weekend.

NOME WRESTLER —Gabe Smith finished in fourth place in the 126

They added the different sections and then placed the turbine on top of the pole. "After the turbine was standing, level and operational, we installed software on a computer so that we could monitor outputs on the turbine, such as wind speed, rpm and electrical output," Ryll said.

Haugen resigns

NWC director accused of misconduct involving a controlled substance

By Diana Haecker

After being served with court papers alleging misconduct involving a controlled substance, University of Alaska Northwest Campus Director Linda Lee Haugen resigned from her position. Vice Chancellor for Rural, Community and Native Education Bernice Joseph confirmed the resignation. Joseph said that Haugen resigned on Thursday, Oct. 27, with an effective date by the end of Friday, Oct. 28. "I can't speak to why she resigned, but I can say that she resigned for personal reasons," Joseph said.

According to court papers, Haugen is accused of misconduct involving a controlled substance in the fourth degree. The complaint quotes a subsection of the Alaska Statute which specifies that Haugen "manufactured, or delivered, or possessed with the intent to manufacture or deliver, one or more preparations, compounds, mixtures or substances of an aggregate weight of one ounce or more containing a schedule VIA controlled substance."

Investigator Jay Sears with the Western Alaska Alcohol and Narcotics team of the Alaska State Troopers wrote the complaint narrative and stated that the Nome

Lethargy, skin lesions and hair loss - those are symptoms of a disease that plagues mostly ringed seals across the arctic, from Canada to the USA and even Russia. The North Slope Borough Department of Wildlife first reported an unusual amount of stranded ringed seals between Barrow and Wainright this summer. In August, the North Slope Borough called the National Marine Fishries Service to report 30 dead ringed seals observed on the beaches between Barrow and Wainwright. These were reported by hunters and others traveling along the coast. The NSB also conducted a live ice seal captive study at the time and they observed a few seals with external lesions and blisters.

Since July, there have been a total of 135 cases, but not all confirmed with the same disease, said NOAA spokeswoman Julie Speegle. "This includes 75 live animals affected, and 60 mortalities," Speegle said. The NOAA sub-agency, the National Marine Fisheries Service, is investigating the disease that has spread along the entire western Alaska coast and St. Lawrence Island.

The NMFS has received reports of infected ringed seals to the NMFS

Well, it's just me again.

So, people keep wondering why the USA students are way down on the list. Well I don't wonder. When I first started working at the school, the computers were put there so the kids could look up information on them, not play games or Face Booking or emailing like they do today. They had to earn that right.

I may be old school, but when I was growing up, we were taught that we had to finish our classroom / homework first, before we could do anything else. And if you're like me, if you missed a word, then you would write it three times and use it in a sentence. At least I could say it worked with my daughter and she got 100 percent on her SBA Math Scores. Yea!

It's a darn shame that our schools went to Standards. Not only have we lost some good students to other schools, but also we lost some good teachers. Another shame is they lowered the level a person needs to attain to graduate. No wonder we are so far down on the list. I know I expect more out of our kids because I know how smart the parents are, so I know how much smarter our kids should be. That is why if I work at the school I often tell them if they don't want to do the work that their teacher assigned, they can do a different page, then do the one the teacher assigned after. It usually works, and the kids respect me later because they know I care nowadays? To me they say violence, alcohol and drugs are OK. After all, look at the way they get away with it on TV and things. Dang—we used to get punished for things like that.

Anyway, take care in this beautiful winter wonderland. Remember to dress accordingly and drink that stinkweed.

As always, Karen Nanouk Unalakleet, AK 99684

Technology has brought us many labor saving and comfort easing devices, but the phone tree is definitely not one of them. Is there anyone other than a druid who enjoys talking to a tree (and expects an answer)? Does it make the caller angry, even if they were in a good mood when they started pressing numbers? Does it make one long for the days of the rotary dial when they could just stay on the line to talk to a human being?

Does a phone tree improve business, or does a caller just hang up? Do voice mail messages always get returned? Has anyone ever tried pressing the Spanish button? How many talking desks do we have in Nome? Who has the longest litany of options one must endure? How many have tried asking cargo shipping questions and had to listen about shipping animals and bodies before landing a human? Arguably the most annoying phone tree in Nome is at the Community College where one gets nowhere, never hears a real person, gets told they have entered an invalid extension or the person is not an option of the call list, or sent to someone's desk who doesn't answer. Do they ever take any phone calls? Surely there are more annoying phone trees in Nome, but none come to mind at the moment.

Certainly life would be more simple, fewer anatomically impossible expletives would inflicted upon machines and commerce would be more civil and customers not put out on a limb if we'd get rid of phone trees and let a real person answer the phone. Is it possible that phone trees are the root of the world's economic problems? Press the pound key. — N.L.M.—

Pilot killed in helicopter crash

Helicopter pilot William Zeman, 66, died in a crash when his A Star helicopter belonging to Era Helicopters went down near Illiamna on Saturday night. The helicopter had been doing seismic work in Nome and was on its way back to Anchorage. According to a Trooper report, Zeman was flying from Bethel to Illiamna to refuel and then to continue on to Anchorage. The Alaska Air National Guard's Rescue Center found the wreck on Sunday. Troopers responded to the scene and recovered Zeman's body. An investigation is underway, including investigators with the National Transportation Safety Board.

State contests Lake and Peninsula Borough ballot initiative's validity

The State of Alaska filed a constitutional challenge in Anchorage Superior Court against an ordinance recently enacted by ballot initiative in the Lake and Peninsula Borough. The ballot initiative sought to ban large scale mineral extraction, namely the Pebble Mine, if it adversely impacts salmon spawning habitat. The ordinance requires the borough's planning commission's approval of a borough development permit before an applicant may receive a state or federal permit. The state maintains that the locals are not in the position to decide how to develop state resources because the Alaska Constitution gives the Alaska Legislature the authority to determine how to develop resources for maximum use consistent with the public interest. The state argues that boroughs have some say in how to regulate resource development, but says that a small majority of voters in a local community cannot usurp the more comprehensive state authority and eliminate the entire state permitting process. Alaska Attorney General John Burns said that this case is not about state support for or against a Pebble Mine project, but that it should be up to the state to fairly and completely conduct the evaluation of the project.

State dismisses conspiracy charges against Fairbanks militia members

The State is dismissing conspiracy charges against Francis Schaeffer Cox, Coleman Barney, Lonnie Vernon, Karen Vernon, and Michael Anderson. Schaeffer Cox and the other militia members were charged with plotting the murder of a judge and Alaska State Troopers. The federal charges against Cox, Barney and Lonnie and Karen Vernon remain. The state's case was dismissed because the assigned trial judge suppressed as evidence all electronic recordings made during the course of the conspiracy. The judge based his decision on an Alaska Supreme Court case, which requires state law enforcement officers to obtain a search warrant before recording or videotaping conversations of people and agents working undercover for the State. Under federal law, the government, when electronically recording an individual, is not required to obtain a search warrant to record conversations. The trials in federal court are set for February and March

DEC drafts new animal care standards

The Department of Environmental Conservation is overhauling the current animal care standards to give more detail so that veterinarians and law enforcement will have better guidelines when assessing animal care. The goal is to provide clear standards for what constitutes adequate feeding, watering, and environment for common livestock and domestic animals, including horses and sled dogs

The DEC has drafted proposed standards to start a discussion in Alaska. A draft document said that the public is invited comment on the proposed concepts in a public forum. Assistant State Veterinarian Jav Fuller said that the revisions are aimed at clarifying and strengthening the role of the state troopers and animal control officers in animal neglect and abuse cases, according to Monday's Fairbanks Daily News-

Statewide suicide prevention plan open for comment

Alaska's Statewide Suicide Prevention Council released a new statewide suicide prevention plan titled Casting the Net Upstream: Promoting Wellness to Prevent Suicide in Alaska. The plan is open for comment from Oct. 25 through Nov. 30. The draft plan for 2012-2017 was developed with input from meetings held around the state. State statute requires the council to develop and update five-year prevention plans. The draft plan is posted at the Statewide Suicide Prevention Council's website, www.hss.state.ak.us/ suicideprevention; and the state suicide prevention portal, www.Stop-SuicideAlaska.org. # City looking at higher user fees for facilities and services

By Sandra L. Medearis

The Nome Common Council and the town's administrators are looking for ways to raise revenue and offset a possible property tax mill rate increase on next year's budget.

This year, the 2011-2012 spending plan called for over a 40 percent increase in property taxes. One way to avoid another hike or to limit an increase would be to raise user fees on City facilities.

The Council held a noon meeting on Oct. 27 to look at what it costs

CITY WINDMILL - Bering Strait Development Corp. employees Joe Bond and John Bullock work on the concrete foundation for a 33-ft. wind turbine tower to be installed behind the Visitor Center. The project is on hold while the city addresses concerns of the neighbors.

Small windmill planned to power Visitor Center

By Diana Haecker

Nome Joint Utilities System is in the process of installing a wind turbine to power the Nome Visitor Center. NJUS manager John Handeland said that the windmill manufacturer Skystream gifted NJUS with a small 3.7 kw wind turbine. The intent was to show the benefits of a wind technology. "We tried to find a public building to connect the tower to and to find out how much it would benefit in cutting down electricity costs," said Handeland.

The turbine would also be used to collect more data. A data-collecting tower at Fort Davis didn't deliver reliable information and was taken down, also out of concern about migratory birds. Handeland said that the Visitor Center windmill is a project to let people get used to the look and function of windmills. He said the turbine itself would be mounted on a 33 to 35-foot high tower. He added that it might be moved at some point in time to another location. "If it's a loud obnoxious thing to have in the neighborhood, we'll curtail its use for parts of the night," Handeland said.

Last week, Bering Straits Development company employees worked on putting in a concrete slab at the site. However, neighboring businesses were caught by surprise at the new project going up. The city put the project on hold to further investigate the effect it has on the neighboring businesses. City manager Josie Bahnke said that all concerns that were brought forward will be addressed before the project goes WAANT intercepted a suspicious package with a heavy odor of marijuana addressed to Lee Haugen. The package contained several glass jars containing marijuana and a glass vial of what appeared to the trooper as marijuana pills.

The amount of marijuana was 54.9 grams. Sears wrote that he contacted Haugen and that she admitted to having sent the package to herself. "Haugen stated that she did not have a medical marijuana card, but was researching how to get one for her medical problems," Sears wrote in the complaint. A portion of the marijuana was packaged in a plastic bag with a sticker that said Colorado Alternative Medicine. According to the complaint, Haugen told the trooper that she did not get the marijuana from the pain clinic and that the bag was used for packaging.

The package was intercepted on Oct. 12. The complaint was filed in the Nome Court on Oct. 14. The arraignment is scheduled for November 15 in Magistrate Brad Gater's courtroom.

In the meantime, Bob Metcalf is the acting director at the Northwest Campus. Bernice Joseph said that Haugen had provided a solid leadership and left the campus in excellent now to get into places like Nome Rec Center or to rent the gymnasium, use the swimming pool or rent the pool for parties or bowl a game at the bowling alley and what it could cost beginning Jan. 1. Fees for use of parks and recreation facilities could go up from 20 percent to 30 percent: examples, youth/senior, adult and family admissions to the Rec Center going from $4 to $5, $5 to $6 and from $12 to $14 respectively. The full court gym rental could go from $75 to $100/hour during the daytime and from $100 to $125/hour after 5 p.m. Suggestions on the list eliminate the half court rental altogether. Nome Rec Center fees have not changed since 2007. Councilman Randy Pomeranz said he hated to see fees increase for senior citizens.

Councilman Stan Andersen suggested handing over the rental of meeting facilities to the Nome Chamber of Commerce—"sort of a one stop shop deal including booking and the issue of chair and table rentals and setups."

Suggested increase in the fees for pool admission and rentals show similar jumps.

Suggested dump fees at the landfill and monofill, unchanged since 1996, are proposed to go from $15 plus sales tax to $20 including sales tax for a covered pickup, for example. About 40 vehicles enter the landfill on an average Saturday

The Mini Convention Center and Old St. Joe's are not paying their way. FY 11 expenses for the MCC is $58,418 and rental income $11,650. For OSJ, the FY11 expense shows $24,822 with rental revenue coming in at $12,575. The two rent for $150 to $250 per 24 hours. The City is open to suggestion on increased fees.

Suggested rental and user fee increases could affect all City of Nome services including permits obtained at Nome City Hall from the clerk's office, museum and library fees, police (for example, fingerprint cards) and Port of Nome. The Council will continue to look at fee increases. The public has an opportunity give input before the increases take place.

Concerning another public facility, City of Nome is going over four or five proposals received in response to an RFP issued for persons interested in selling land to the City for the Richard Foster Building, a new facility to house museum displays and storage.

Alaska Gold Co. has put forth its 172,000-sq. ft Sixth Avenue property that was under consideration and reiected as a site for the new state building. The company is also offering another piece—the Commerce Bench Overlook and view property—with at least 300,000-sq. ft. available for selection. However, that property is in negotiation for sale to a third party. Additionally, Alaska Gold can offer properties at Satellite Field, Allie Subdivision and lots across from the new hospital, according to a letter from Mike Stammers, land manager.

The Louis Green, Sr. family is offering land on Front Street next to the Alaska Army National Guard Armory, four lots owned by Louie Green Jr., Briday Green, Stacey Green, Brenda Green and Kellev Green at a price of $330,000 cash or terms and other consideration, and five lots owned by Louis Green Sr. at a price of $385,000 cash or terms and other consideration.

Kawerak, Inc has submitted a proposal to lease or donate a 28,000-sq. ft. lot on Seppala Drive as an in-kind contribution to the Richard Foster Building, provided Kawerak can participate in the design process to include leased space in the building to house the Beringia Center of Culture

from Barrow to Hooper Bay. In Shishmaref, hunters noticed many sick seals this summer, not only ringed seals, but also oogruk, or bearded seals. Percy Nayokpuk said that this time of year, the seals should have the best fur but in many seals, the hair is slipping off. "It's a big concern here," Nayokpuk said. "Oogruk is the one most harvested sealsz here for meat and oil. If anything happens to oogruk, the future of Shishmaref is looking pretty bleak," said Nayokpuk.

Subsistence hunter Glenn Nayokpuk said that he has observed the same symptoms on young oogruk, spotted and common seals. "It looks like someone took sandpaper over patches of fur, it's all gone,' Nayokpuk described. He observed that the diseased seals look brownish in color when emerging from the water. "The healthy ones are black in color when they surface," he said. Nayokpuk said that this year he has seen lots of unhealthy seals. Even the young ones that are affected, he noticed, have a foul odor when first cutting them open and show white intestines. "I had a good, healthy looking 7-footer with pretty fur, but it was easy to pull out. It looks like they're molting, the hair pulls right out of their skin," Nayokpuk said.

On St. Lawrence Island, subsistence hunter David Akeya saw his share of diseased animals. Going toward Gambell on the shoreline, Akeya saw 15 to 20 seals stranded on the beach. "The all looked ill," Akeya said. "They didn't even run when I approached, they just sat in one spot." Most of the seals he saw were ringed seals. He noticed that the disease was on grownups as well as pups. One pup in particular was badly afflicted, he said. "Around the eyes, the skin was all rippled up, there was hardly any fur and at end of flippers, there seemed that something was eating away it," Akeya

So far, he said, he hasn't seen the disease on whales. Around this time of the year, Akeya, said, hunters go out to catch seals and maybe a walrus if it presents itself. "My favorite hunting is seal hunting because my girls really like to eat seal, it's very nutritional," Akeya said. "We don't want to see the seal getting sick.'

Officially, NMFS received reports that only one bearded seal and six spotted seals have been observed with similar skin lesions and lethargic behavior.

To get to the bottom of what causes the disease, nine different laboratories and more than 30 experts are gleaning clues from samples sent to wildlife agencies. The NOAA spokeswoman Speegle said that biologists and veterinarians are taking blood and tissue samples from dead and sick animals and testing them for bacterial, viral, fungal or toxic

Kathy Burek-Huntington is a private veterinary pathologist performing most of the necropsies on seals that were sent to Anchorage. About 35 full necropsies have been completed on fresh seal carcasses and yet, there are no results as to what the mysterious disease is. Speegle said that the results of the necropsies were inconclusive, but tests results ruled out certain diseases. Samples so far have tested negative for poxvirus, herpesvirus, papillomavirus, morbillivirus and calicivirus. Until they know what causes the disease, NOAA warns to not eat diseased animals.

Asked if there is a mechanism in place for a disaster declaration of some sort to assist communities that may face food shortages, Speegle said that NMFS is working with regional and community representatives, The Ice Seal Committee and individual hunters to monitor the ice seal strandings and collect carcasses for necropsies whenever possible. Various agencies are involved, including the Alaska Department of Health and Social Services, Division of Public Health on statewide concerns related to diseased ice seals.

The NMFS Alaska Region and the North Slope Borough are working together on a petition to have these ringed seal strandings marked as a so-called "Unusual Mortality Event."

"NMFS will share the results with the coastal communities that depend on seals for food when the information is available," Speegle said.

If folks come across a diseased animal they should call the National Marine Fisheries Service 24-hour hotline at 1-877-925-7773. In Barrow or Wainwright call the North Slope Borough Division of Wildlife Management at (907) 852-0350. In Nome, contact the Marine Advisory Program at the UAF-Northwest Campus at (907) 443-2397 or the Eskimo Walrus Commission at (907) 443-4380 or 1-877-277-4392.

Higher reading scores attributed to pilot program

By Lori Head

Nome Board of Education heard some promising news as Dave Keller, principal of Nome Elementary, reported scores from the Fall 2011 Measures of Academic Progress test. Nearly half of the first graders scored at their reading level, with an additional 17 percent reading above level, leaving 34 percent reading below their level. Compared with the second graders at 49 percent below reading level and third graders at 53 percent below grade level in reading, the question was...what's made the difference?

Jon Berkeley, director of Federal Programs, explained that this year's first graders have had two years of scientifically based curriculum being taught by certified teachers, due to the preschool pilot program, currently in its third year. "Even the director at the state level has noted Nome's success with the pre and post-test data that's been collected," stated Berkeley. Kindergartners are not tested in the fall, so there were not those scores to support this explanation. However, the scores are encouraging as the school district moves towards the target year of 2014 when the current first graders will be third graders, and hopefully 90 percent will be reading at or above grade level by the end of the school year.

Audit presentation

Eric Campbell, CPA – audit vice president/director of Mikunda, Cottrell & Co, Inc., presented the school's 2011 audit report from Anchorage via Skype with Cathi Wojtanek, NPS business manager, seated beside him. Campbell stated that Nome received a "clean opinion or an unqualified opinion" in the audit which is "what you want to see in all your financial statement opinions."

There were three findings that required corrective action. Campbell explained that they were "nitpicky findings" dealing with internal controls over journal entries, payroll batch processing and the bank reconciliation process. The cause was determined to be due to turnover in the district office where reviews by appropriate personnel were discontinued. The reviews were reinstated before the auditors left Nome.

Regarding a different topic, Campbell explained, "One of the rules of the State of Alaska is that 70 percent of your expenditures are supposed to be for instruction. You're at 64 percent. You will receive a waiver for that. Actually you did receive a waiver, in advance, for not meeting 70 percent. It's highly unlikely you will ever meet 70 percent. I expect the state to get rid of this rule. None of the districts off of the road system make 70 percent, and for the most part that is because of the price of fuel."

Campbell also commented on the original budget versus the actual budget and was impressed with how close the two were. "Your original budget —$11.1 million in revenue and you ended up with a little under $11.1. You know, a fifty thousand or sixty thousand dollar difference. And then your expenses — $10.8 million and you ended up $10.6, a couple hundred thousand dollars under your original budget. But still, really close to what you were budgeting. That's a good sign. It shows that you kind of have your budget zeroed in pretty good."

Legislative Priorities

With November coming up, a FY12 Legislative Priorities list needs to be prepared and submitted to the Nome Common Council. Discussion stemmed from last year's four requested facilities priorities. First on the list, Sprinkler/Fire Alarm Upgrade to Bldg. D had been taken care of and could be removed. However, the board recommended the three remaining priorities roll over to the FY12 list:

- Nome Elementary School Gym Floor Replacement ($100,000 to $160,000 estimated cost).
- Lighting Upgrade to all District Facilities ($100,000 estimated cost).
- NBHS HVAC Direct Digital

Control Project Phase II – Completion ($90,000 estimated cost).

Superintendent Mike Brawner inquired about the board's interest in security cameras. Board member Barb Nickels said it would depend on the cost. The need for a new loader was also discussed as a possible priority. Brawner was directed to prepare a draft of priorities that the board could discuss and finalize before mid-November's submission to the City Council.

Agenda items tabled

Three items on the work session's agenda were tabled due to board member Barb Amarok's absence:

- School Board Calendar a month-by-month calendar of board's responsibilities and meetings.
- School Board Committee Assignments to determine which board members would serve on various committees.
- Schedule for School Board Meetings (Day of the Week) – to discuss the possibility of changing the

And finally, the City has put the old ambulance garage on Bering Street up for sale but had no bidders with a minimum price set at $144,000. There was an interest in

Nome volleyball celebrates seniors, hosts mixed-6 tournament as tune-up for regionals

By Stephen Palmatier

Does there ever come a time when a team needs time off during the season? If there ever was a time, it would have been this weekend for the Lady Nanooks. So how did they relax? Well, they played more volleyball games of course. This past weekend, the Nome-Beltz High School ladies volleyball team hosted a Mixed 6 tournament which had eight teams participate from around the region. However, this was not an intense tournament, but rather a fun, relaxing tournament instead.

The Nanooks, who came off of four straight tournaments away from Nome returned home this weekend to not only mentally and physically get a break from strong competition, but also get a chance to play in front of their home fans one more time this season. Due to this, it was a time to not only have a fun tournament, but also a time to recognize the seniors on the ladies team. The seniors included Mary Ruud, Chloe Mattheis and Audrey Buie.

Ruud, who played the Libero position was a four year varsity player, two year captain, and was the #1 digger in her sophomore year. Mattheis, a middle hitter was a captain of the team and a three year varsity player. And Buie, an outside hitter was also a three year varsity player. Rob Luce, the head coach of the Lady Nanooks had nothing but praise for each one

"Mary was fabulous at being able to read the hitters to return serves and she has gotten better all season," said Luce. "Also, Chloe gives us great height and leadership and Audrey is a great outside hitter'

In what was a celebration of seniors, the Mixed 6 invitational turned out to be a thrilling finish. In the final match, both Nome teams made it to the final. Both were varsity girl squads, with one of the teams being the normal starters during games. In the first set, the second Nome squad came out strong and defeated the varsity girls shockingly 26-24 in the first set. However, after the first set, the Nome varsity girls started to play more solid and won the next three sets in a row, 25-20, 25-18, and 25-20. Besides the Nome victory, the best thing the tournament showed was the strong depth that the Nanooks have on their squad with the second team giving the varsity everything they had.

This depth may be the key to the Nanooks, as in two weeks they head to Wasilla for the Regionals tournament in what will be a chance for the Nanooks to qualify for the state tournament. Luce is confident about where his squad is heading into Re-

"It was great to play the tournaments we have already because we got to face teams like Grace Christian who were the 3A Champions last Luce. "Playing competition like that season, and we beat them," said

I believe will have us ready to face

whoever it is we play in Regionals."

Nome Nanooks wrestlers post solid scores in Anchorage

By Stephen Palmatier

This past weekend the Nome-Beltz High School wrestling team finished in a respectable 14th place in the ACS Lime Solar Wrestling Invitational held in Anchorage. A total of 44 teams made it to the invitational where Nome was able to truly evaluate itself to see how they stacked up with the competition.

In the invitational, Nome finished with one champion and one second place finisher. The champion for Nome was Gabe Cabrera who won the 120 pound weight class. However, the one Cabrera beat was also from Nome, Emery Booshu. It is clear that Nome has a strong group with that weight class. The question remains, what other depth do the Nanooks have? The answer from this tournament was, not that much. The Nanooks did not finish with another guy in the top six for its weight class. This may pose a problem for the Nanooks as the season continues with more tough tournaments ahead.

This tournament included teams from all over Alaska, and the winner of it was Nikiski who won in dominating fashion with a score of 207.0

points for the team. The second place finisher was Dillingham with a score of 167.5, a whole 39.5 points behind Nikiski. Finishing in third place was Valdez with 157.0 points and rounding out the top five were Bethel and Kotzebue.

In the tournament, there were 14 different weight classes, in which only two teams won multiple individual championships for the weight classes, Nikiski with three and Dillingham with two. The winners for the individual titles were Brettlyn Reich of Kotzebue in the 106 pound weight class. In the 113 weight class, the winner was Tanner Thain of Craig. For the 120 weight, it was Gabe Cabrera of Nome as mentioned before. For the 126 class, it was Jared Miller of Dillingham. In the 132 class, the winner was Will Patrick of Sitka. In the 138 class, it was Cade Schlagel of Dillingham. The 145 class went to Marius Kugo of Bethel. The 152 pound weight class went to Kaden Spurgeon of

Nanook swimmers make a big splash at regionals

Boys' freestyle relay wins medal

By Kirsten Bey

Six Nome-Beltz swimmers traveled to Fairbanks for their Regional Swim Meet this past weekend. The meet includes schools from the Fairbanks area: West Valley, Lathrop, North Pole, Hutchison, Monroe Christian and Nome. Unlike other sports, in swimming Nome-Beltz swims against every other school in the state. There are no 1A, 2A, 3A, or 4A divisions in swimming. So the results of this year's swim team are really terrific.

This may be the first time Nanooks have earned medals at the Regional meet. The Nome Boys 200 Freestyle Relay took third place at the meet. They finished with a time of 1:44.17. This time would have placed them in the point bracket in any of the Regional meets across the state. Klay Baker, Jake Stettenbenz, Zach Sullivan, and Nathan Blandford are the relay team. They are also the sum total of the boys swim team. These four athletes also swam the 200 Medley Relay and just missed winning a medal, finishing in fourth place, but still earning points for the team. Their time in the medley relay (1:59.73) also would have earned them points in the other regional meets

Each male swimmer made it to finals in all of their events and everyone earned points for the team. The boys team earned 20 points, finishing in fourth place overall. Points are not earned for consolation finals but swimmers are recognized if they have one of the top 12 times in their event. Some regions recognize the top 16 swimmers in each event.

Senior and team captain Nathan Blandford finishes his high school swimming career earning points in all four of the events he swam: 50 yard Freestyle, 100 yard Freestyle and the two relays. Swimmers are only allowed to swim in two individual events at meets. If swimmers were allowed to swim in more individual events, it is likely Nathan would place in all events; he is a fine all-around swimmer. Nathan swims the backstroke leg of the medley

Junior Zach Sullivan specializes in the breaststroke. He lowered his time in the 100-yard breaststroke by a couple seconds over the course of the season and earned the team a point in this event. Zach swam the breaststroke leg in the Medley relay. Zach also made it to consolation finals in the 50-yard freestyle event.

Sophomore Jake Stettenbenz anchored the medley relay with his freestyle and he earned a point for the team with his performance in the individual 100-yard freestyle event. Jake also swam consolation finals in the 50-yard freestyle event, finishing seventh just barely out of the points.

Freshman Klay Baker swims butterfly. In addition to swimming the butterfly leg of the medley relay he earned the team a point with his performance in the 100-yard butterfly. Klay also made it to consolation finals in the 50-yard freestyle event.

Of the 12 finalists in the 50-yard freestyle, the Nanooks filled 4 of those lanes. No other team had as many swimmers in the finals of that event. West Valley had three swimmers, North Pole had three swimmers, Lathrop had one swimmer and Hutchinson had one swimmer.

On the Girls' team, junior Devynn Johnson earned points in both of her events: the 50-yard freestyle and the 100-yard breaststroke. Freshman Lacy Erickson overcame the jitters that challenged her at the Valley Invitational Meet, two weeks earlier, and finished in the consolation finals in both her events: 500 yard freestyle and the 100 yard backstroke. Lacy was seventh in the 100 vard backstroke, just missing an opportunity to score a point for the Overall the swimmers did a fantastic job, working hard in all their events. The teams that finished ahead of Nome in the meet have dozens of swimmers on their teams. Nome was the only school to have the same four boys win points for two different relays.

This shows versatility as well as talent. The Nome swimmers' abilities were recognized by swimmers from the other teams and one swimmer from a Fairbanks school made a point of finding the team at the end of the meet and congratulating them on a job well done. This was wonderful sportsmanship on her part and a well-earned pat on the back to the Nanook Swimmers.

Individual results were:

Boys:

Senior Nathan Blandford: 50yard freestyle - 24.64; 100 yard freestyle – 55.25

Will this past weekend give a great experience for the squad to have success against future competition? We might be able to answer that question starting this coming weekend when they head to Bethel for their next tournament.

Cold remedies: What really works?

Bob Lawrence, MD Alaska Family Doctor

There is no cure for the common cold. But for centuries, mankind has searched for an effective remedy to treat the nasal congestion, sinus pressure, headache, scratchy throat, and runny nose that come with this wintertime viral illness.

The common cold is caused by one of many viruses that attack the upper airway. In general, these viruses thrive in a cold dry environ-

The best defense against a cold is to keep the airway moist and warm. This is why your mother always told you to wear a hat when going out into the cold. This is also why the body warms up to a low-grade fever when a virus is infecting the airway.

A temperature elevation in the body slows the growth of the virus.

In addition, the nasal cavity and sinuses produce a constant, almost imperceptible, flow of mucus that forms a protective coating over the inner surface of the upper air-The way. mucus captures particles of dust, pollen, viruses, and airborne bacteria. Mucus is full of antibodies that kill or inactivate bacteria and viruses. When a harmful virus or bacteria is detected, defense cells release a substance called histamine, which leads to increased mucus production and swelling of nasal tissues as blood flow brings white blood cells and nutrients to fight off the infection. This is why an ANTIhistamine helps to relieve the symptoms of nasal congestion.

Microscopic hairs, called cilia, line the airway wave in a coordinated fashion to create a flow of mucus out of sinuses through the nasal cavity to the back of the throat where the mucus is usually swallowed. Interestingly, chemicals in tobacco smoke paralyze these cilia making it more difficult for people who smoke to clear mucus from the airway leading to the typical smoker's cough. Function of these cilia improves within a few days of smoking cessation.

Effective cold remedies are ones that support the body's natural immune response to a viral infection. Though symptoms may last from 7-14 days, there are a few proven remedies to make the cold less se-

Hydration. Drinking plenty of fluid ensures that sinuses and the nasal cavity can drain freely. A plugged nose may be a sign of relative dehydration.

Salt Water. Up to ½ teaspoon of salt can be dissolved into 8 ounces of water to make a gargle solution to sooth a sore or scratchy throat.

Saline Nasal Rinse. Over-the-counter or homemade nasal saline (using 1/4 teaspoon of salt to 8 ounces of water) can be used as a spray or rinse for the nose. Some people use a neti pot, a small teapot-looking container, to pour saline in one nostril while leaning over a sink.

Chicken Soup. Warm soups with lots of vegetables provide temporary symptomatic relief as well as nutrients the body needs for a strong immune system.

Over-the-counter cold Zinc. remedies that contain zinc have been shown to shorten the course of a cold. However, people should not use nasal sprays that contain zinc because these can permanently damage a person's sense of smell.

Vitamin C. Despite popular opinion, vitamin C will not prevent a cold, but it may help shorten the course of symptoms.

Foster's Report

Rep. Neal Foster

Hello again, everybody. I hope you had a happy Halloween and are looking forward to a pleasant Thanks-

I'd like to update you all on where Alaska stands in the Redistricting process. In my last newsletter I noted that there were three lawsuits pending. In the meantime, Petersburg has dropped all but one count of their lawsuit, and just this week Fairbanks requested to drop their law-

Both entities' listed legal expenses as their reason.

The court has not yet approved the Fairbanks request and wants to hear concerns from residents and the city councils' responses before deciding. If Fairbanks is allowed to drop the case, it will leave the remaining plaintiff on the hook for almost all expenses in the case against the Redistricting Board.

While that plaintiff (a private Fairbanks resident) has pledged to stick with the case regardless of the court's decision, the question is whether he would have the financial wherewithal to bear the burden of the entire case himself; especially when two cities dropped their case based on expense.

My takeaway from all of this is that if Fairbanks is allowed to drop the case, not only will the Board's plan stay in effect, but also for the first time in the state's history it won't even go to court.

The Federal Communications Commission has recently announced that it will be reorganizing the Universal Service Fund.

What does this mean to rural Alaska? It's not definite, but it likely means a substantial reduction in the subsidy that brings parity between urban phone rates and rural ones. This could affect things from your standard family phone call to our vital telemedicine network.

The Chairman of the FCC recently visited Bethel as part of a review of rural areas in preparation for this re-

At the time, parties involved were under the impression that the uniqueness of rural Alaska was adequately understood by the chairman and that it would be held harmless in the reorganization. This appears not to be the case. I and many of my colleagues have written the FCC and our federal delegation about the importance of the program and the necessity to keep the Alaska portion of the program as is. We do not know yet what the full implication of the FCC's decision will be, but we will be watching closely

Recently there has been a movement to resurrect the Alaska Coastal zone Management Program via a ballot initiative. The three initiative sponsors are the Mayors of Juneau and Kodiak along with a Kenai assemblyman.

If passed, the new program would be similar to what was in place prior to 2003. It would be a very strong program from the perspective of the local communities.

One side effect of this proposed initiative could be increased pressure for differing sides within the legislature and administration to resolve their differences and work out a compromise plan; something they were unable to do during the previous extended and special sessions.

For his part, the Governor has indicated that he does not plan to introduce a new bill on ACMP and intends to just let the initiative process run its course.

The proposed initiative still needs to be certified by the Lt. Governor and needs about 25,000 signatures to get it on the November 2012 Ballot, though the recent endorsement of the plan by the Alaska Federation of Natives should help make that a reality. The demise of the program had caused several problems for our Coastal Resources Service Areas. Most notably is that existing funds, grants, and programs are stalled and cannot be resumed since the CRSAs were dissolved with the demise of the ACMP program. This leaves no legal entity to access or administer these funds and projects. I am working with Senator Olson and others to find a fix for this, but it appears it will require action from the entire legislative body and therefore cannot be addressed until next

My staff recently attended the Rural Energy Conference. Topics included wind systems, micro-hydro, biomass, energy storage, rural construction issues and much

The main takeaways from the conference were that heat, logistics and diversity were the key issues to ad-

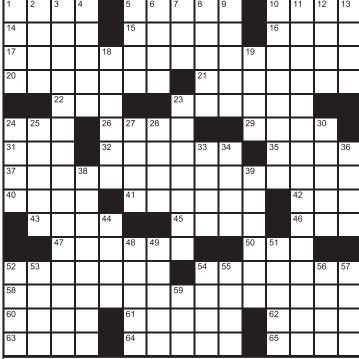

Heat makes up 20 to 40 percent of rural energy needs but is often overlooked when addressing rural energy

The Weatherization program helps with the consumption side, as does the Energywise program, but not much is being done on the generation side.

Most grants and programs focus on electrical generation, which is great for providing light and power for our appliances but is inherently inefficient for providing heat, and as you know, you can live in a cabin without light but you can't live in a cabin without heat. The high costs associated with power and heat in our villages comes mostly from one source, the cost of transportation. Even if we could get diesel for free, it would still cost about $4/gallon once it reached our village pumps.

The most important thing we can do for now is look at what resources we have available locally and how our infrastructure can be updated to harness that resource.

The last consideration I'll mention is diversity. Like many other things, the solution for energy is not one size fits all. Solutions will have to be tailored to specific locations and communities and in most cases it will not be one silver bullet but a combination of techniques and technologies that will address this issue.

Saying it Sincerely

Rev. Karen Sonray Our Savior Lutheran Church Member of Nome Ministerial Association

"I Lift Up My Eyes Unto the Hills, from where does my help come?" Psalm 121

This popular scripture was written in a time when the people of Israel could actually look up to the Canaan hills that surrounded them and see images set up of false gods by other people in the region. Thus the statement: I look up unto the hills (and see false gods), but (in contrast) my help comes from the almighty one, the creator of all that is seen and unseen, "the Lord, the maker of heaven and earth." My God alone is the one who will not let your foot be moved. He will watch over you and never slumber.

When I look up to Anvil Mountain, I often find myself thinking of this psalm and this understanding of its original meaning.

Not long ago, as I was leading a youth group at our church, several of the young students asked." What were those things for up there on Anvil Mountain anyway? Were people really afraid of the Communists? Were they really afraid they might be bombed?" I explained, yes, those were up there to protect our country so that, indeed, we might know if our enemies- the Soviets back thenwere approaching by air or by nuclear missile and attempting to attack us. In a sense we put our trust, night and day, into this network of "White Alice" and hoped it would protect us night and day, even while we slept.

Martin Luther said, "What you fear, love and trust the most becomes your god." It does not make any sense, then, to fear, love and trust things that cannot truly give us life. Only God, who is our maker and redeemer, can truly call us to Life. Only God can create life out of nothing. Only God can bring life out of death, bring hope from despair; bring light out of our darkness.

Next time you look up at Anvil Mountain, ask yourselves, "Whom do I trust?" Is my trust in God's word and promises? Am I putting too much trust and worry into things that only give me more anxiety and cannot satisfy?

Our deepest worries, our deepest longings are best put into the hands of God who indeed cares for each of us, made us and redeemed us.

'The Lord will keep you from all harm....he will watch over your life; the Lord will watch over your coming and going both now and forever-salmon important to the local people here? My question to the reader is, "When are you going to come out of the closet and be counted?" I hear a lot of anger on the street about how the Alaska Dept. of Fish and Game manages our natural resources, but nobody speaks out. Please feel free to do so. It's our fish and game and the state works for us. This means all Alaskans, which includes the people of Nome. AFN's message was to start a working relationship with the State of Alaska. The bad salmon runs in the Nome Subdistrict are a good starting point for us here in Nome. If you want more information, feel free to contact me at 434-1900. Let's put our heads together and do something about our current situation. I have been concerned and I would like your help.

Louie Green, Jr. Nome, AK

Dear Editor,

The centerpiece article in the November National Fisherman described a regulatory change that lifted the freeze blocking construction of new Bering Sea commercial fishing vessels. The article's author was almost giddy about how these changes would allow fishing companies to replace the worn out old pollock trawlers that they had been stuck with since the American Fisheries Act was passed by congress in 1998.

He went on to say that this change would have the biggest impact on the aging catcher vessel fleet, mostly built in the 1970s; vessels like the seven pollock trawlers recently purchased by NSEDC's subsidiary Siu Alaska Corporation.

I wrote a letter in the October 13 Nugget about how the large numbers of salmon killed and wasted as bycatch in this dirtiest sector of the pollock fishery make Siu's investment hard to comprehend, but it looks even worse now. Salmon bycatch rates are highest in the vicinity of Dutch Harbor. Siu's catcher vessels have to deliver their catch to processing plants in Dutch Harbor, and the processors won't buy fish that are more than three days old, which limits how far from port they can fish. That's why the catcher vessels kill and waste 80-90 percent of the chum salmon that are taken by pollock trawlers as bycatch.

The National Fisherman article says that the older catcher vessels have outdated, inefficient hull designs and propulsion systems. This makes it hard for NSEDC's catcher vessels to get away from salmon bycatch, and in the future will make it even harder for them to compete with the modern fuel efficient vessels that will be built now that the regulations allow it.

What looked like a bad deal before looks like a potential disaster now, and NSEDC and Siu aren't talking about any of this. It isn't a small matter; the rumored purchase price was $52 million, which is a big chunk of cash to blow on what could turn out to be a fleet of white elephants fishing in the dirtiest segment of the fishery.

Our boats are on the dirty 20 list of the 20 pollock trawlers with the highest salmon bycatch. It's going to be hard to get anyone to take us seriously when we talk about False Pass salmon interception when we are killing and wasting thousands of our own and other people's salmon in roughly the same area.

Our partner in this venture, the CDQ group Coastal Villages Region Fund, has a track record that doesn't inspire a lot of confidence. CVRF has been making reckless debt financed investments in trawlers for a number of years and has lost and continues to lose millions of dollars.

CVRF was previously known as Coastal Villages Fishing Cooperative. CVFC bought the factory trawler Brown's Point, and the investment went horribly wrong. The State of Alaska had to take back their CDQs or risk having them seized by the Christiana Bank of Norway to pay off the bad debt, and in 1997 CVFC ceased to exist.

If NSEDC has information up their sleeves showing that this deal is not as bad as it looks, it is a mystery to me why they wouldn't want to share it with the public. During the past 40 years, we have seen other organizations in western Alaska sink millions of dollars into poorly thought out business ventures that went belly up; sometimes these failures took down the whole corporation or would have if Ted Stevens hadn't stepped in with a bailout. Ted's not here anymore, and we aren't going to have an easy time getting bailed out if we fail again.

If NSEDC's venture into shore-based trawlers isn't as bad as it appears to be, they ought to tell us why. Their tradition of withholding important information from the public is inappropriate for a corporation created for no other reason than to serve our communities. It is time to replace the wall of silence with transparency and accountability. They need to explain why this isn't just millions of dollars down a rat hole and while they're at it, why it is all right to kill and waste so many salmon as bycatch.

In 2004, Eugene Asicksik, in testimony before the state CDQ oversight team, unveiled his vision of creating a $900 million permanent fund from CDQ program revenues and paying everyone in Norton Sound a dividend. Four years later, Eugene and the people in NSEDC who supported him were ousted and the cash they had hoarded was up for grabs.

The admin staff who replaced Eugene radically changed the course of our region's CDQ program behind the scenes. Instead of cautiously salting away money in the bank and in the stock market, the plan now is apparently to raid the cookie jar and dive into risky for-profit business acquisitions leveraged with millions of dollars of debt through their forprofit subsidiary Siu Alaska Corporation. I say apparently because none of these plans have been made public; even NSEDC board members don't have access to Siu financial records and are barred from Siu meetings. They didn't name it See-You for nothing.

During the past few years, we've seen some very large corporations go broke or close to it from big shot deals gone bad. Gambling with millions of dollars can result in big losses, and the commercial fishing industry is highly competitive. Achieving success is difficult even for the people who know what they're doing.

According to the 2009 NSEDC annual report that was delivered to everybody's mailbox, during its first year and a half, Siu booked net operating losses of $4,220,795. That's a lot of money lost in a short amount of time. All most of us know about that is a single sentence buried on page 22 of a hard to decipher report. NSEDC doesn't answer any questions about things like this; they simply won't talk about it.

NSEDC does not communicate adequately with the residents of the 15 communities who are its owners. Siu doesn't communicate at all. We have a right to know what they are doing with our money, and they have an obligation to tell us what they are going to do to protect our salmon stocks from being wiped out as bycatch by the pollock trawlers.

Sincerely, Tim Smith Nome, AK

Vitamin D. There is good evidence that vitamin D helps prevent colds and other viral illnesses. Vitamin D is found naturally in salmon and seal oil, and can also be taken as a daily supplement.

Cough and Cold Medications.

Over-the-counter cold remedies will not prevent or shorten the course of a cold. However, most provide a mix of medications that help treat the symptoms of a cold. In general, these medications may be used for a few days to provide comfort.

Anti-histamines, like diphenhy-dramine (Benadryl), partially block the body's response to a virus and help make the symptoms more tolerable.

Guaifenesin, a medication found in many cough syrups and cold medications like Robitussin or Mucinex helps breaks up mucus and allows for increased clearance of thick mucus.

Pseudoephedrine (Sudafed) is a decongestant that may be taken for short periods to reduce the swelling of tissues in the nose and sinuses.

Stronger antihistamines and nasal steroids are helpful for many patients with chronic rhinitis, but these medications have more serious side effects and must therefore be prescribed and taken under the direction of a physician.

Both prescribed and over-thecounter medications taken for nasal or sinus congestion can increase a person's blood pressure and place further strain on the heart. Therefore, patients with hypertension or heart disease should discuss appropriate use of decongestants and antihistamines with their provider.

Arctic Pinkies' Walk for the Cure draws large crowd

Story and photos by Diana Haecker

Hundreds of Nomeites gathered in front of City Hall on Tuesday, Oct. 25 to set out on the 5th annual Arctic Pinkies cancer awareness walk. A picture perfect sunset provided the backdrop as walkers of all ages, dogs and even Velvet Eyes, the reindeer, wore pink in memory of the late Christine Perkins. Most people walked also for family members or friends diagnosed with cancer, with their names written on a piece of cloth pinned to their parkas.

The cancer awareness walk started five years ago with the late Christine Ann Carpenter Perkins, whose intention was to bring cancer awareness to the community. Perkins' sisters Gigi Immingan and Tiffany Martinson continued to organize the walk and the fund raising efforts. Immingan said that funds go to cancer research as well as investments here in the region. With the money, the Arctic Pinkies bought a Chemo chair and warming blankets, donate money to the Arctic ICANS and to help fund Norton Sound Health Corporation's "Make a patient smile" program. "When a person undergoing chemo has a bad day, we help out by getting groceries or getting their nails done – anything to make them feel better and put a smile on their face," Immingan said.

CHARLIE'S FLU ANGELS — Nurse students (left to right) Jessica Mute, Sarah Weaver and Amber Ryan were the secret weapons against the flu during the Norton Sound Health Corporation's Health Fair at the Rec Center last weekend. Starting next year, children with insurance will be asked to pay for vaccination against the flu, pneumococcal conjugate (blood infections, pneumonia, and meningitis) and rotavirus, which causes diarrhea in kids

The State Division of Epidemiology had to cut funding for those vaccines that were previously available to all Alaskan children regardless of income, tribal enrollment and whether or not they were insured.

Gerri Yett, immunization program manager in the Division of Public Health said that the 25 percent of children who are insured through a private insurance will no longer be eligible for the free flu shot, human papillomaviurs and rotavirus starting in 2012.

The reason for the cut in services is that the State's Section of Epidemiology sees a $1.2 million decrease in funding per year. The rationale, according to a bulletin from that section, is Alaska had been significantly over-funded relative to other state immunization programs. Quoting budgetary constraints, the Center for Disease Control and Prevention decided to cut support for Alaska's universal immunization program.

Yett said that out of 200,000 children in Alaska from age 0 to 18 years old, 50 percent will still qualify for free immunizations for the Vaccine for Children program, which serves Medicaid eligible, American Indian

NEST shelter to be open all winter

By Diana Haecker

Nome Emergency Shelter Team members were scrambling at press time to prepare an early opening of the emergency shelter as a massive storm approached the Norton Sound and Bering Strait area. On Monday, the National Weather Service issued a warning that forecasted winds up to 75 mph and severe coastal erosion along the western coastlines.

NEST was scheduled to open its doors at the Nazarene Church on November 15, Co-director Sue Steinacher said, but the storm forced an early opening date on the organizers. New this year is that NEST will have an actual opening day, as it is no longer contingent on the temperature to drop below -10°F before its doors are opened.

For the first time since its inception in the spring of 2008, the shelter will be open every night from 9 p.m. to 9 a.m. In prior winters, NEST only provided shelter when severe weather of minus 10°F and colder hit Nome.

The emergency shelter was a grass roots response to the growing problem of homeless men and women in Nome and the need to prevent homeless and chronically inebriated people from freezing to death in the streets.

"The creation of NEST was all done by the work of volunteers, first a handful, then a basketful," said Steinacher. The movement in Nome

Nome Planning Commission considered and unanimously approved the final plat application for Camp 5 Subdivision at the panel's Nov. 1 meeting.

The purpose of the subdivision platting is to divide up a piece of land to fulfill a sales agreement that Alaska Gold, a division of NovaGold, and Nome Gold Alaska made in March. The sales pact requires AG Co. to convey a part of the Nome Gold purchase within 20 days of the replat approval by the City. The Camp 5 land involved lies about three miles out of town where the road to Nome-Beltz Jr.-Sr. High School curves to the west after Icy View. The land lies on both sides of the highway and involves five U.S.

Mineral Survey placer gold claims: Saturday Creek, Good Luck, Crawford-Fraction, Holyoke Gulch and Bessie Bench.

In sliding the final plat through the Nome Planning Commission plat approval process, Nome Gold gave an affidavit that it would request a lot consolidation that would eliminate a property line that appears to run through two historic Alaska Gold wooden buildings.

The commission approved the final plat at its meeting based on this affidavit and the satisfaction of work orders they handed the companies last month with preliminary approval. The final plat identifies the approximate location of the Camp 5

Dangerous storm winds up to hammer Western Alaska

By Diana Haecker

As of press time on Tuesday morning, Nomeites were preparing for what the National Weather Service calls a historic hurricane-force storm system moving into the Bering Sea. The storm was forecasted to have sustained winds of 80 mph over an area the size of Colorado. It was also predicted to produce storm surge effects on the Alaskan coast 8 to 10 feet above normal water levels. The City of Nome is in its path and with that in mind, Nomeites nailed wood boards to their windows and got ready for something that hasn't been seen in the area since the storm of November 1974.

The Weather Service stressed that this would be an extremely dangerous and life-threatening storm. In response, the City of Nome had an emergency planning meeting on Monday afternoon and went into full incident command mode on Tuesday morning. Nome emergency services administrator Mimi Farley said that the incident command center was set up at the Nome Public Safety building with Chip Leeper being incident commander and acting city manager, as City Manager Josie Bahnke is out of town. The Nome Rec Center was opened at 2 p.m. as the official emergency shelter. Farley said that emergency services are concerned about the high winds and the forecasted rise in sea levels that may flood low lying areas like Belmont Point. As of noon, winds had already picked up and the ocean was a raging wall of waves and foam. Only ravens seemed to have a good time, playfully riding the wind gust along the shoreline.

Nome Public Schools released all students early and most businesses closed down shortly after 2 p.m. except for Hanson's Safeway store. AC close their doors at 3 p.m. for the day. All airlines closed and canceled all flights for the day. The south side of Front Street was to be evacuated. The court was closed and the Wells Fargo bank closed. BLOWING SNOW— In preparation for a huge winterstorm, the DOT and the city of Nome cleared snow off Nome streets on Monday.

Letters -

Dear Editor,

I am writing this letter because I am one of the many residents of my village that does not own a house. The housing shortage situation has always been a huge issue in my community in the past 20 years. We have many young adults in their 20s still living with their parents, and some of these people even have several children.

This really frustrates me because we have the Bering Strait Regional Housing Authority that gets several hundred thousand dollars in IHP funding a year, from each community that they serve. Each year the tribal governments sign over the IHP grant funding to the Housing Authority. They later decide in which community the houses will be built, install boilers in communities that need them, or perform maintenance on the houses that need it.

Many residents who own Housing

Authority homes paid their bills, and have houses in terrible shape because of the poor engineering. The BSRHA did not even perform maintenance or change out boilers or windows when they needed fixing or changing. We have an elderly lady with terrible windows, and in winter months it can get pretty cold. The floors on the homes that they built in the 1980s are all water logged or rotten and have been changed by the owners. Plumbers come out every 5 to 10 years to work on the boilers.

I have a close friend who got evicted because the housing authority never assisted them when they needed the help from the BSRHA. Their boiler exploded. Now they are living at camp and with another family in town. They shouldn't even have to get evicted because they never got help from the housing authority when they needed it.

Something needs to be done about

Ho-Hum Hokum

How much longer can we endure the Republican presidential candidate wannabes and their quest for the outlandish, outrageous doofus spotlight? It kind of makes one embarrassed to think that these folks are the best they have. They need a candidate who has a campaign with structure and leadership.

Let's look at the hopefuls. Mitt Romney is probably the smartest of the lot, but he flip-flops like a hooked humpy and is wound around "personhood." There's Rick Perry, the Texas governor who hates just about everything. They have scary Michele Bachmann who is just plain ditzy. There's Pizza man Herman Cain who wants no nukes for China and should stay away from "Becky Beckastan." These folks pin a great big "Kick me" sign on their behinds and get all bent out of shape when the press goes after them. All their problems are blamed on left wing conspiracy or Rick Perry. Cain had a 10 day warning that his sexual harassment problems were going to hit the fan and he did nothing to prepare a response.

Some of us don't know which is worse— reality TV shows or Republican presidential hopeful debates. The anti-government fervor that has hit the nation is not to be confused with the belief that Americans want a bumbling fool in the Oval Office. The Republicans need to get some backbone and a long hooked pole to snare some of these kooks off the campaign podium. They are an embarrassment to their party and the Democrats should enjoy the laughter and make the best of it. —N.L.M.—

this issue. We need our representatives to speak out for the people, and not just butter us up at the annual housing meeting, then tell us that everything is going to be OK.

Our housing project here in Elim started in 2003. The homes were finally put up last summer, and the deadline for the residents to move in was June. It has been pushed back one more month, one more week. How long are they going to wait? After they move in, it would free up some homes or apartments for people like me who are struggling to get their family together and have their own place.

I saw some signs posted on Facebook about people in the Anchorage area who want to boycott their housing authority. I feel the same way, but where would everyone move to? If we got the money from the federal government and put it into our tribes we could build one or two houses a year. We need some good people in our Housing authority who understand how we feel, live in our houses for a year and feel our pain. I may sound like a radical, but it's just the truth

So, I would advise all you children in school to get your education and help your communities. We can fix these problems. Education is the key to success, and no one can ever take that away from you.

Sincerely,

Tyler L. Ivanoff Elim, Alaska

Alaska Federation of Natives

This year's AFN was a good one. I am always delighted to attend this important event every year. This is the largest annual gathering of Alaska Natives and according to the Anchorage Convention and Visitors Bureau, about 4,200 people visited Anchorage for AFN, while the First Alaskans Institute expected about 1,300 for the Youth & Elders Conference. My family and staff like to take this time as an opportunity to see friends scattered across Alaska and to see constituents from the district and hear their concerns. This event is also important because it allows for Alaskan Natives statewide to come together and combine political influence through the AFN's 37-member board representing nearly 180 villages. It's always interesting to see what comes of the convention, and I look forward to the resolutions AFN passes and sends to the legislature.

'Putting the Honeybucket in the Museum'

During AFN, my staff joined the Bush Caucus and met with directors of the Alaska Native Tribal Health Consortium as they presented an overview of the "Innovations in Water and Sanitation Systems" across rural Alaska which was organized by Senator Albert Kookesh's office. This was particularly interesting for my office because we've also been doing research on this, as it continues to be an issue. During Tony Knowles' governorship, he announced that the State of Alaska was going to 'Put the Honeybucket in the Musuem' and make sure rural communities had clean and running water. Since then, a few state agencies (ANTHC, DEC, Village Safe Water, Rural Utility Business Advisor, DOT) and federal agencies like USDA, the EPA, and the Denali Commission, HUD, and private organizations have collaborated together to work toward this goal. What we've found through research and the recent meeting is that while there have been many accomplishments in getting communities served, the honeybucket still remains in people's homes. So far, according to the DEC Division of Water, 75 percent of rural communities have access to running water. Of Alaska's 250 rural communities, 35 communities do not meet the definition of being "served."

I felt the presentation from ANTHC at the meeting was a very beneficial one. This allowed the agency to provide the Bush Caucus with an update and present obstacles and innovative solutions to the challenges. Essentially, rural communities face several obstacles in becoming served communities because of factors like geography, population, and funding. Funding continues to be the main obstacle. Smaller communities are more expensive to provide service, and maintenance of service for all villages continues to be problematic. As you will see in the chart below, there is a whopping $7 million shortage for rural sanitation.

I'd like communities to become aware of the organization, Alaska Rural Utility Collaborative, which is an ANTHC statewide program that manages, operates and maintains water and sewer systems in rural Alaska. Once communities are serviced with a clean sanitation system, becoming a member of ARUC can save communities money. ARUC is able to get volume discounts for fuel, parts, and supplies. ARUC also has a staff of clerks, managers, plumbers and operations specialists who are all paid for by grants. Many communities subsidize their water and sewer system from their own general fund. ARUC sets rates to pay expenses, so the community will no longer have to subsidize from their general fund, and then can use general fund money for other needs. The services are an assest to our communities. Visit ANTHC's website (http://www.anthctoday.org/) for more information and search for ARUC.

I'd like to mention that I'm happy to hear that the communities of Pitkas Point, Chuathbaluk, Kwigillingok, New Kasigluk, and Fort Yukon recently received water and sanitation facilities. Hooper Bay and Quinhagak are scheduled to receive service next year.

Former Nomeite to become new commander of Alaska Army National Guard

Col. Leon M. "Mike" Bridges has been promoted to take command of the Alaska Army National Guard during a special ceremony, scheduled for Jan. 7, 2012 at the Alaska National Guard armory on Joint Base Elmendorf-Richardson, Bridges is a career National Guardsman who has served more than 31 years in the Oregon, Washington and Alaska National Guards. Bridges has served in a number of command and staff assignments and is currently serving as the deputy chief of staff for logistics for the Alaska National Guard. Bridges also deployed for a year in Iraq, serving as deputy team leader and governance advisor of an Embedded Provincial Reconstruction Team in Baghdad during 2007-2008. Bridges will be promoted to brigadier general on Jan. 6 prior to the change of command ceremony.

Protesters occupy Sitka

Despite a weather forecast that called for heavy rain and winds of 65 miles per hour, more than 75 protesters attended the Occupy Sitka event last Tuesday. The rally began with a hailstorm and a moment of silence for Scott Olsen, an Iraq war veteran who was seriously injured by police last week while peacefully protesting in Oakland. Former U.S. Senate candidate Scott McAdams spoke about the need to hold elected leaders accountable for regulating the financial system. Protesters in their speeches encouraged people to close their accounts with major banks, boycott large corporations and challenge the financial and political systems in creative ways.

BLM to conduct oil and gas lease sale at NPR-A

The federal Bureau of Land Management is conducting an oil and gas sale in the National Petroleum Reserve Alaska, opening bids on Dec. 7 in Anchorage. The BLM offers 283 tracts on more than 3 million acres.

Fairbanks out of the redistricting lawsuit

Citing limited funding resources, the Fairbanks North Star Borough dropped out of its lawsuit contesting the validity of Alaska's new redistricting plan. The presiding judge, Superior Court Judge Michael Mc-Conahy issued an order that said that the borough can continue to support the lawsuit as a "friend of the court." Fairbanks residents George Riley and Ron Dearborn and the City of Petersburg also filed lawsuits challenging the new redistricting map. The cases argue that the boundaries dilute the representation of voters in the new districts. AP reports that the cases are rolled into one and a trial is set for January.

Begich fumes over bonuses paid to Fannie, Freddie

Sixty U.S. Senators including Mark Begich (D-Alaska) signed a letter to Federal Housing Finance and Treasury Secretary Timothy Geithner objecting to the recent news that nearly $13 million in bonus pay was approved for 10 executives at Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac.

"I was floored to hear of these bonuses being doled out at this time under these circumstances," Begich said. The letter urges FHFA to make changes to the executive compensation policy to more accurately reflect the mission of the agency. Secretary Geithner was included in the letter due to the role the Treasury Department plays in overseeing taxpayer dollars that were used to bail out Fannie and Freddie.

Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac received $141 billion in taxpayer bailout funding.

Two Nomeites signed up for Iron Dog

By Diana Haecker

Iron Dog veterans Mike Morgan and Tre West are signed up to run their Polaris iron dogs from Big Lake to Nome and on to Fairbanks next year. Morgan paired up with Chris Olds, who along with Tyler Huntington won last year's Iron Dog.

Huntington in turn teamed up with Tre West to compete as well. Altogether 40 teams so far have signed up for the 2012 Iron Dog, including Todd Palin and partner Eric Quam, Todd Minnick and Nick Olstad and Marc McKenna and Dusty VanMeter.

were housed at AMCC. The City of Nome, Kawerak and its village offices were closed by afternoon. Norton Sound Health Corporation sent non-essential staff home, but kept hospital services open.

The Nome Emergency Shelter Team, aka NEST, opened their doors at the Nazarene Church at 2 p.m.

As soon as news of the brewing storm reached Nome, the Nome Carrie M. McLain Memorial Museum began moving all items, photographs and other exhibits out of the museum and upstairs to the Nome Kegoayah Kozga Library. Museum Director Laura Samuelson said she had the help of 10 volunteers to get everything moved to higher ground.

The NWS's winter storm warning was in effect from 6 p.m. Tuesday to 9 p.m. Wednesday. Major coastal flooding and beach erosion were expected from Tuesday night until Wednesday night.

septic system. Utility easements are now identified. They have provided verification of a percolation test (drainage). They have shown the portion of the property designated for snow storage. The final plat shows the location of a landfill on the property. Surveyor George Krier prepared the plat for the subdivision.

The planning panel approved the final plat following a hearing for public testimony.

Emory "Chuck" Wheeler took the opportunity. He gave the history of Icyview Subdivision in which he has lived since 1974 and said he hoped the Camp 5 Subdivision would bring in revenue through property taxes to ease the burden on property owners for paying for services.

Wheeler wanted to know what kind of property value the unimproved tracts would have, and how much property tax undeveloped they would provide and how much revenue they would bring into the City.

"I'd like to see a very reasonable valuation and a payment of taxes on the undeveloped stage and when they get houses on there or what they are going to put there. I'd like to see some revenue coming into the City so they could share the burden falling on individual tax payers." Currently there isn't much tax base in the town, Wheeler said.

"Alaska Gold, NovaGold, they are on their way out. Rock Creek shut down. I want to see a fair valuation. I want to see these services are paid for. I want to see fairness. No giving them a good deal. That's where I stand," he said

No development was planned, Nikolai Ivanoff, land manager for Alaska Gold, told the panel.

"This subdivision was created for one reason, to split properties north and south of the highway," he said. There will still be a softball field on Alaska Gold property near Satellite

Staff has reviewed the preliminary plat and recommended approval, John Blees, acting City engineer said. All conditions and requirements for subdivisions have been met.

The commission approved the plat unanimously. Wheeler made certain the commission knew that he did not believe the new owners would not build improvements on the Camp 5 Subdivision.

Other information provided the commission by the City administration showed that the City, for October, collected building permit fees totaling $19,024 for construction valuation of $192,770 and remodel fees totaling $260 for jobs valued at $10,200. So far for 10 months of 2011, total fees have been $64,923 for a construction valuation of $11.6 million.

Commissioners Jeff Darling, Randy Romenesko and Greg Smith had excused absences from the meet-

Of 98,689 Alaska children who are not eligible for the Vaccine for Children program, 46,884 will be underinsured—they can go to a Public Health Center to become vaccinated. "The children who can't receive free vaccine are those who have insurance," Yett said.

She said this would probably only negatively affect teachers living out in the villages with children, who don't qualify for the free vaccine administered through NSHC clinics, but they would have to come to Nome's Public Health Center to get their vaccines. Underinsured children can be vaccinated by Public soon generated interest within agencies that deal with homelessness in

The first winters, NEST was completely organized and staffed by volunteers who served as shelter monitors. For the lack of a designated building, the shelter is set up at the Nazarene Church in Nome.

Steinacher explained that NEST is more of an emergency shelter than a homeless shelter. After the first spring NEST received lots of attention, support and its first grants from the Alaska Housing Finance Corporation's Homeless Assistance Program. The city chipped in as well as Kawerak, Norton Sound Health Corporation, Nome's CHARR bar owners association, the Dept. of Health and Social Services for direct emergency-type services corporations and countless individuals.

Steinacher said that almost all village corporations have contributed and an elder from Savoonga sent part of his paycheck to pitch in. "NEST is truly a region-wide effort," Steinacher said.

Just recently an anonymous woman donated $30,000 through a Schwab investment fund. With the funding in place, NEST is currently in the process of hiring staff to fill two nightly shifts as shelter moniHealth centers statewide.

The flu vaccines for children are

• NEST open all winter

"It was an Olympic effort to staff the shelter with volunteers," said Steinacher, Volunteers were mostly working people and to ask them at short notice to stay up all night was something that contributed to major burnout. "But we managed to be fully staffed every night that we were open," said Steinacher.
In 2009, NEST raised money locally to hire Bonnie Hahn as the volunteer coordinator. In the winter of 2010, more funding came in and the criteria for opening the shelter was raised from -10°F ambient temperature to -10°F wind chill temperature. NEST was also able to hire shelter monitor staff and was open for 85 nights, offering a warm bed for 70 different individuals, Steinacher

For the upcoming winter season, Bonnie Hahn again is the shelter manager, overseeing day-to-day operations. NEST already hired a cook and is in the process to hire approximately eight part-time shelter monitors. Organizers are also working on a cooperative agreement with the XYZ Center so that for one or two nights, NEST guests can use the XYZ shower and laundry facilities. Steinacher said that donations of salmon and game meat or any other Native foods are needed this winter.

Crab managers want to keep larger quota

By Sandra L. Medearis

Earlier this year, federal crab regulators came up with a new assessment model for estimating the legal male biomass of Norton Sound red king crab that made them recommend a harvest cutback for the local crab fleet.

The Crab Plan Team, a part of federal North Pacific Fishery Management Council, said a new study showed a smaller biomass than previous studies had shown. The assessment model used by the federal Crab Plan Team determined that the previous stock assessment model used to predict the Norton Sound legal male biomass (only male crabs of a certain size can be harvested) was overestimating the "actual" abundance by an average of 40 percent. Therefore the new model predicts a lower red king crab population estimate compared to the model used last year. Looking backward, an analysis estimated that the Norton Sound commercial red king crab fishery was allowing crabbers to remove 12-16 percent of the legal male biomass rather than the regulation 10 percent. In other words, former regulations were allowing crabbers to take more than the law allowed, and that needed to be adjusted to prevent overfishing, according to the Crab Plan Team.

In May, CPT recommended reduction in the 2011 harvest to 239,000 pounds from around 400,000 pounds, a 40 percent reduction. The stable and plentiful crab population and the past summer's bounty of crab harvest did not justify such a drastic cut, local biologists said. Cutting 160,000 pounds from the harvest would effectively whack in half the economic benefit to several communities-Nome, Golovin and Unalakleet for exam-

Crabbers feel the pinch

The large number employed by the fishery and all the people they support would feel the impact, Charlie Lean, biologist and fisheries research and development director at Norton Sound Economic Development Corp. said.

"It is a big economic hit. Instead of the crab season bringing $2 million into the economies of the area, it would bring $1 million," he said. "The money from the local fisheries turns over multiple times in the communities, compared to manufactured items from elsewhere."

Forty processing workers and 30 commercial fishers work in the local crab fishery.

"Every one of those people pays rent and buys groceries," Lean said.

He and Jim Menard, area manager of commercial fisheries for the Alaska Dept. of Fish and Game have seen models for estimating the legal male red king crab biomass swing up and down over the years. Model or no, they say the biomass of crab has remained stable and healthy, even if the actual harvests were 12-16 percent rather than 10 percent.

However, for the 2011 season, Menard pulled the goal back from 10 percent to 9 percent—from 397,000 pounds to 358,000 pounds.

But, "as manager, I did not feel comfortable with what the CPT was recommending," Menard, of ADF&G said. "We didn't live with it. We set a quota that didn't go over the acceptable biological catch of 388,000 pounds."

Lean and Menard want to see a solution to the issue whereby the fishers continue to take 12 to 16 percent of the maximum allowable harvest. They say the Norton Sound king crab biomass can sustain the larger harvest.

The management of the crab harvest is shared between the federal NPFMC and the ADF&G. The NPFMC makes recommendations through the Crab Plan Team, which covers 10 crab fisheries, and the state responds with regulations to manage the crab fishery under federal oversight. In this area, Menard makes the management decisions after hearing the opinions of researchers, fishers and asking the industry for their season's capacity for crab.

Lean has gone to bat for the Norton Sound red king crab industry, writing a letter to the state Board of Fish that has resulted in a proposal to come up at the Board of Fish meeting in March. The gist of the proposal is to go along with the new biomass estimation model but set the quota at 12-16 percent of the allowable maximum harvest, because in practice, the crab population is doing fine with the harvest over 10 percent if indeed the harvest is that large a piece of the pie. If the new crab biomass estimation model does not justify the usual harvest for recent years, then crab counters are missing some crab that could be moving around, Lean said

"We're not angling to catch more crab, but to keep the fishery stable,"

"The model as it operated for years had a recipe for how many crab to harvest. Now that the model is changed, the recipe is off. A normal reduction for rebuilding a population would be 5 percent, Lean said. The drastic adjustment set by a new regulation based on the revised model would reflect an overestimation of 80 percent instead of 40 per-

"It's a huge penalty to pay for a math error," he said. "It doesn't reflect the biology of the situation. The population is healthy and stable.

Get back to the 2011 crab fish-

What happened? Lo and behold! When the Norton Sound red king crab season opened around August, the crabs started filling the pots and could hardly be turned off. "It was the shortest fishery - 33 days - the fastest we've seen since the fishery opened to small boats. To me, this made the new model more suspect." Menard said. Because of a storm at the end of the season that kept fishers from pulling their crab pots for several days, the 2011 season's harvest ended up at 408,000 pounds of juicy Norton Sound red king crab, an amount that surpassed the acceptable biological catch of 388,000 pounds.

"Even though we overshot the quota, at the end of a trawl survey it showed more crab than we thought," Menard said. "We've haven't been harvesting at 10 percent for a lot of years. Let's set the harvest at the practice level. The practice [of harvesting over 10 percent] hasn't decimated the crab population.

After the lowered quota recommendation based on suspected overharvesting came out last May, the ADF&G, with assistance from the NSEDC, performed a trawl survey, done every three years, with the research boat Pandalus this past summer in July-August. That survey showed a large legal male crab biomass-just as the season was ready to close in August. Menard wishes the Norton Sound survey done earlier, had been split out from the other nine crab surveys done later in the season. What if he had cut back the harvest before the crab season and before the trawl survey and then the survey came back with a large biomass, he mused.

"When setting the harvest, it is right up against our season. The industry wants the numbers in March. We hold them off until April. We need to survey the Norton Sound red king crab earlier," Menard said.

The goal in pounds of Norton Sound red king crab to come into the Nome Small Boat Harbor next summer is still under consideration. The ADF&G is still working on numbers for the 2012 harvest.

Dan Harrelson reelected as NSEDC board chairman

Wales elects Lucy Kitchen as community representative

By Laurie McNicholas

The board of directors of Norton Sound Economic Development Corp. reelected Dan Harrelson of White Mountain as chairman at their annual meeting Nov. 4 in Unalakleet. Harrelson chairs the board's fivemember executive committee. Other directors elected to the executive committee were William (Middy) Johnson of Unalakleet, vice chairman: Oscar Takak of Elim, sergeant at arms; Dean Peterson of Golovin; and Don Stiles of Nome.

The NSEDC board reelected corporate officers Janis Ivanoff, president; Simon Kinneen, vice president; Jerry Ivanoff, secretary; and Rick Walicki, treasurer. The directors elected three persons for three-year terms to the board of the company's wholly owned for-profit subsidiary, Siu Alaska Corp. They reelected Stiles to an NSEDC-affiliated seat, reelected Neal Foster of Nome to an at-large seat, and elected Harvey

Sookiayak of Shaktoolik to an atlarge seat. Sookiayak previously has served on both the NSEDC and Siu

Jack Carpenter of Anchorage and John Handeland of Nome were elected to at-large seats on the NSEDC finance committee for one year. Carpenter and Henry Ivanoff of Unalakleet have held the at-large seats for several years. Ivanoff did not submit a statement of interest in serving on the committee this year. NSEDC presented him with a framed photo of Unalakleet and a letter of thanks for his service on the committee and as a member of the full board, which he chaired for several vears.

Wales voters elected Lucy Kitchen as their community's NSEDC board representative on Nov. 1, reports Wales Mayor Frank Crisci. Kitchen garnered 29 votes compared to 20 for incumbent Frank Oxereok, Jr., and 5 for Sean Komonaseak. The same candidates competed in an initial election on Oct. 4, but the election was contested due to vote count inconsistencies that the City of Wales could not reconcile, so City and NSEDC officials agreed to hold a second election, Crisci said.

2010 Western Alaska CDQ program report available

By Laurie McNicholas

The 2010 annual report for the Western Alaska Community Development Quota Program recently was published by the Western Alaska Community Development Association, reports WACDA Executive Director Aggie Blandford in a press release dated Nov. 1.

WACDA is the governing panel for six CDQ entities that implement the program for 65 eligible villages with a total of 27,000 residents. Norton Sound Economic Development Corp. represents 15 Bering Strait communities in the CDQ program. The other five CDQ groups are the Aleutian Pribilof Island Community Development Assoc., the Bristol Bay Economic Development Corp., the Central Bering Sea Fishermen's Assoc., the Coastal Villages Region Fund, and the Yukon Delta Fisheries Development Assoc.

Highlights of the 2010 WACDA report include the following financial performance information for the six CDO entities combined:

• Revenues—Revenues totaled $414.5 million, with operating expenses of about $178.8 million, for an increase in net assets of more than $235.7 million.

• Total net assets—Assets totaled nearly $864 million and liabilities totaled just over $126 million, resulting in total net assets of about $737.6 million

The WACDA report does not include financial performance data for individual CDQ entities. NSEDC issued a 2010 annual report in late September showing total assets and liabilities of $164.9 million, and total net assets of $144.2 million, a gain of $8.9 million for the year.

"...The six CDQ entities together provided wage and salary jobs to nearly 2,300 individuals in 2010 with total combined payroll exceeding $32.4 million," reads the WACDA press release. "In addition, ex-vessel payments in excess of $24.7 million were paid to more than 1,500 fishery permit holders in Western Alaska, and those permit holders supported an estimated 1,700 crew member jobs. The six CDQ entities granted over $2 million in scholarships and invested more than $660,000 in other training and skill development opportunities to eligible residents. In 2010, the CDQ entities also made community capital investments of nearly $8.9 million toward infrastructure projects and more than $7.5 million in community benefit projects. Economic investments totaled nearly $235 million for the year."

The WACDA report describes activities of CDQ groups and includes information about communities they represent. Copies are available from WACDA at (907)-868-7634, and the report is posted at wacda.org.

The CDQ program was created in 1992 by the North Pacific Fishery Management Council and authorized in the Magnuson-Stevens Fishery Conservation and Management Act (MSA) in 1993. The program annually receives an allocation of about 10 percent of many harvestable fish stocks in the Bering Sea, including valuable pollock, cod and crab quota. WACDA was formed by amendments to the MSA in 2006.

2011 pollock quota not reached

Fishery took 191,441 chum salmon and 25,451 Chinooks as bycatch

By Laurie McNicholas The Bering Sea pollock fleet was unable to harvest the total allowable catch (TAC) of 1,252,000 metric tons of fish allocated to the directed pollock fishery for 2011, reports Josh Keaton, inseason pollock fishery manager for the National Marine Fisheries Service. About 63,000 metric tons of pollock potentially worth many millions of dollars were left in the water when the fishery closed by regulation on Nov. 1. Keaton said pollock fishermen usually harvest the entire TAC.

The fleet took 191,441 non-Chinook salmon as bycatch this year, compared to 13,294 in 2010, according to a NMFS report. Salmon are prohibited species in the fishery, but they are caught in trawl nets by fishermen targeting pollock. Chum salmon comprise 99 percent of non-Chinook bycatch in the pollock fishery. Nearly all chum bycatch occurred during the pollock B season that began June 10; only 256 chums were taken as bycatch in the winter A season fishery.

Chinook (king) salmon bycatch increased to 25,451 fish this year, up from 9,737 in 2010. Most Chinook bycatch usually occurs in the A season, but this year the pollock fleet took 18,314 Chinook in the B season. Increasing numbers of Chinooks showed up on pollock grounds in September when pollock concentration had diminished and the fishery's catch rate had slowed.

In 2010 with a much lower pollock TAC-813,000 metric tonsmost sectors of the pollock fishery had harvested a majority of their B season allocation by Sept. 11. This year part of the fleet continued fishing through October.

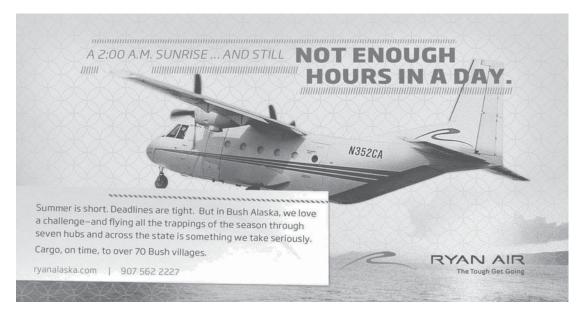

Weekly reports issued by NMFS show that participation in the B season pollock fishery peaked in the week ending June 25 when more than 70 vessels caught more than 44,000 metric tons of pollock. In the week ending Oct. 22, 45 vessels harvested 16,343 metric tons of pollock and took 4,681 Chinook salmon as bycatch. In the last full week of the fishery ending Oct. 29, the catch totaled 11,905 metric tons of pollock by 27 vessels with 1,333 Chinook salmon taken as bycatch.

The North Pacific Fishery Management Council will set the 2012 Bering Sea pollock fishery TAC at a meeting scheduled to begin Dec. 7 in Anchorage. The council bases its decision on the results of annual Bering Sea pollock surveys by NMFS, an Acceptable Biological Catch determined by scientists and input from the public.

The council adopted a motion proposing a 2012 Bering Sea pollock TAC of 1,253,658 metric tons, 1,658 metric tons higher than the 2011 TAC, during a meeting in October in Unalaska. However, council member Duncan Fields of Kodiak said he thinks the 2011 pollock TAC may have been set too high and he will reconsider the proposed 2012 pollock TAC proposal at the December meeting. Council member Roy Hyder, who represents Oregon, indicated that he too will do so.

The council's Groundfish Plan Team will discuss 2012 Bering Sea pollock catch specifications at a meeting this week in Seattle.

Health Fair shows Olympic spirit

By Diana Haecker

Nome's annual Health Fair under the motto "Striving together, winning in Wellness" boasted 32 booths that filled the Nome Rec Center last Friday and Saturday. The theme tied in the First Lady Michelle Obama's Let's Move initiative that was fully embraced by Nome and CAMP programs, said Jessilyn Dunkelberger, prevention program coordinator at Norton Sound Health Corporation's CAMP office.

Stations included tobacco cessation programs, family support services, social services, dental, vision screens, even a booth on pet health, and Nolan the Colon, a huge walkthrough colon with polyps and all.

The fair drew 875 participants and offered free flu shots, vision and hearing screening and low cost blood tests. The hit among Nome Elementary school students was the germ station. A special lotion was applied to hands, which were then stuck in a box lighted by a black light and germs glowed in the dark, eliciting screeches of "Grooossss!" from the youngsters.

Three nursing students were on hand to administer free flu shots, a service of which 385 adults and 94 children took advantage. Louis Murphy with NSHC said that he brought 600 doses of flu vaccine and that the Health Fair is a prime opportunity to give flu vaccines for "herd immunity" and lessen the likelihood of becoming infected with the flu.

On Saturday, 153 people took advantage of the low cost blood tests. The general purpose of the Health Fair is for early detection and the increase of health awareness, said Dunkelberger. This has worked for 105 out of 199 people who had their eyes screened. These 105 people were encouraged visit the eye doctor and 14 were identified to need glasses.

This year's fair was designed to be all fun and games, with a healthy dose of useful information. Health Fair participants had to put in at least an hour to fill out all of the 32 questions on the quiz, making the rounds and learning odd facts like earwax having the purpose of cleaning the ear canal. Prizes included balls, water bottles and CAMP backpacks. The health fair was funded through an IHS special diabetes program for Indians grant.

Sinusitis: What to try before going to the doctor

By Bob Lawrence, MD Alaska Family Doctor

Every year around 40 million Americans suffer from a sinus infection, called sinusitis. Many of these people will go to the doctor for help, but there are several things you can try at home to treat a sinus infection and possibly prevent a trip to the clinic.

The sinuses are air-filled cavities in the bones of the cheeks, forehead, and between the eyes. These small cavities open to the inside of the nose through tiny holes not much wider than a sewing needle. Normally a constant, imperceptible flow of clear mucus drains the sinuses through these small openings. Sinusitis results from inflammation of the membranes that line the sinuses, often blocking the normal flow of fluid out of the sinus cavities.

When inflamed, a blocked sinus fills with mucus, causing pain and pressure over the affected sinus.

This pain usually worsens when bending forward and can sometimes be confused with dental pain in the upper row of teeth. Occasionally, sinusitis is associated with a lowgrade fever.

In most cases, a virus, the same one that causes the common cold, causes sinusitis. Sometimes bacteria or allergies cause more serious, longer lasting, cases of sinusitis.

These viruses, bacteria, or allergens cause the sinuses to become inflamed and filled with mucus.

The key to relief is drainage of the inflamed sinus. For many people this can be accomplished in a few

First, an over the counter decongestant, like pseudoephedrine (Sudafed), can be taken to open the sinus passages. Nasal sprays that contain a decongestant, like oxymetazoline (Afrin) or phenylephrine (Neo-Synephrine), also work well for many people. However, the nose can become dependent on nasal decongestants, and therefore nasal decongestant sprays should never be used more than four days at a time. This does not apply to normal saline rinses or saline nasal sprays which can be used daily for long periods of Second, drinking plenty of fluid is important for keeping the sinuses draining. With better hydration, mucus runs more smoothly and can pass more easily through small pas-

Third, a medicine to break up

mucus, called a mucolytic, is available over-the-counter. The most commonly used medication for this purpose is guaifenesin (Mucinex or When taken with Robitussin). plenty of fluid, guaifenesin helps drain the sinuses of excess mucus.

Finally, an anti-inflammatory medication like ibuprofen (Motrin) or naproxen (Aleve) can provide temporary pain relief as well as reduce inflammation in the sinus cav-

Most cases of sinusitis will resolve without antibiotics. However, antibiotics may be helpful if symptoms last for more than a week or if symptoms suddenly worsen after initially improving. See your doctor if symptoms become severe, last more than a week, or if over-thecounter medications or home remedies do not provide relief.

eldest, her brothers and sisters looked up to her. At 14, Adeline Jeanette died of meningitis, devastating the family.

At 16, Emma gave birth to Adeline, who was adopted by her parents and four years later, she gave birth to Glenn James, who was also adopted by her parents. Emma acknowledged Adeline and Beah as sister and brother. Brothers Doc and David helped raised Adeline and Beah. On January 21, 1950 she married her love, Johnny Ivanoff. She and Johnny raised their children, Rita May Johnson, Lorreta Carrie, Donna Davida Koutchak, Paul Dennis Ivanoff and Sergei Dean Ivanoff and later adopted Paul Fred Ivanoff in 1972.

Emma was a hard worker, mother, housewife, fisherwoman, seamstress and loved the outdoorshunting and camping. She loved to pick berries and cut fish. She was a devoted Christian who called the pastor if she, for whatever reason, was unable to make it to church that day. Emma gave service to the Covenant Church as a board member and secretary and served on the Covenant High School Board. Emma was also a devoted school

On September 30, 1987 she recevied a U.S. Postal Service Award, a 25 year certificate of appreciation in recognition of dedication, loyalty and support toward the betterment of the Postal Service. On January 26, 1990 she received a U.S. Postal Service Award for dedicated service of 27 years at her retirement party.

Her home was always open for anyone in need and she loved to feed people and share. She has left many relatives up and down the coast, places near and far.

To her last days she prayed for every member of the family, her grandchildren and great-great grandchildren and even included those who were suffering and in need of healing.

We saluate our matriach and thank sister Emma for sharing her life with us as our auntie, gram, friend, mentor, cousin and mom.

Emma is survived by her sons Sergei and Paul Fred, sister Adeline and Charlie Hopson, brother Glenn "Beah" and Lillian Katongan, sistersin-law Millie Katongan and Mabel Katongan; in laws on the Ivanoff side and sons-in-law Bill Koutchak and Vaughn Johnson. She was proceded in death by her husband, Johnny Ivanoff; daughters, Rita, Loretta and Donna; son Paul Dennis; parents Hannah and Pete Katongan; brothers Francis "Doc" and David, sister Adeline Jeanette.

Peace to the memory of Emma, one of God's saints.

Rose Paniqrak Quyauraq (Alvana) Koezuna

Rose Paniqrak Quyauraq (Alvana) Koezuna was born to the late Magdeline Suluc and John Alvana on August 29,1930 while the family summered in Nome. Rose was raised in close consultation with her late grandma Suksraq and grandma Sunaqluaq in the Ugiuvagmiu culture on King Island. Rose was immersed in the Ugiuvagmiu ways of knowing and lived a life with a strong faith in God. She vividly remembered living under the church bell of Christ the King Catholic Church on King Island.

In her young years Rose learned to sew clothing made out of seal skins, reindeer, muskrat, beaver and squirrel, and was taught which type of edible greens to pick and various ways of mixing agutaq - ice cream, and to cook the animals needed for sustenance. She was constantly around singing and dancing. Rose later supported her family often with these skills. Rose learned and knew the essential family network of cousins and relatives as they are needed for practical and cultural King Islander survival. As the matriarch of the family, Rose was called Akauraq, oldest of her siblings and cousins.

Rose met and married Anthony on November 17, 1946. Rose's father Alvana built the house on King Island for the newly wedded couple. Together they had 10 kids. Rose and Anthony lived an Ugiuvagmiut lifestyle. Anthony was a hunter and he readily hunted sea birds, seals, ugruk, walrus and polar bears. His mode of transportation was his kayak, and Rose had to create clothing for her husband in fur parkas, pants, mukluks and gut skin rain gear. Rose had to sew (along with her grandmas) ugruk skins together for Anthony's kayak utilizing waterproof stitches. After their sixth child, the family moved to the mainland where Anthony was able to find seasonal work. Anthony continued hunting in his kayak for seals in front of Nome, and Rose maintained their home. It was at this time that the couple had to raise the Koezuna children both in the Ugiuvagmiu and Western ways. Anthony and Rose together made sure their children attended mass at the Catholic church every Sunday morning at 8 a.m.

Rose's traditional support of Anthony continued to his hunting partner. In the early 1960s, Anthony and Rose met and befriended Marine Biologist John J. Burns and Joyce, and their children Johnny and Bernice. John became Anthony's hunting partner. Anthony taught John the art of kayak hunting in our Inupiaq language, and so Rose and our greatgrandma Suksraq and grandma Magdeline had to sew John's Ugiuvagmiu hunting clothing.

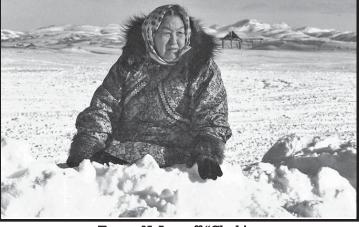

In the summer of 1969, Rose became widowed and with her strong faith in God, and Ugiuvagmiu leadership skills she continued to raise their 10 children and kept the family together. Rose made sure her children grew up with a strong connection to family, cousins, the Ugiuvagmiu culture and King Island. Everyone of her children and many of her grandchildren visited and obtained a strong connection to King Island. These trips were made by boat. A couple of the trips were by Mike and Marie Saclamana's skin boat or by a Coast Guard cutter.

Rose had an important close relationship with her cousin Cecelia Awaluk Muktoyuk. Together they cut up Eskimo food, made seal oil, cooked marine mammals, and picked greens. Especially they laughed together. The cousins fed everyone at the Woolley Lagoon camp, as this was the way of the King Island people. Rose always kept busy creating parkas, mukluks, knitted gloves, fur hats for her children, her grandchildren and great-grandchildren. To provide for her family Rose used her extraordinary skin sewing skills to make seal skin pillows, skin parkas, seal skin slippers and sold them to local and other stores across the state as well as to individual order. In her sewing prime, Rose would sew three seal skin slippers a day. In the family tradition Rose passed on to Asaaluk her sewing skills as she learned from her grandmothers. Rose lived a long and arduous life but she never complained about what all needed to be done, it just got done. Just like the Nike company: "Just Do

The last trip Rose made to King Island was by helicopter with her family. In 2005, family friend Alice Rogoff Rubeinstein, Rose's sisters Agatha and Yaayuk, daughters and grandchildren made the trip. Rose and Agatha cooked walrus meat, kauk, dried meat and greens for the trip. At King Island in her family's home she used the seal lamp to cook bread, heat water for tea and coffee. Everyone who came to her house ate and had tea or coffee. Hospitality was a way of life of the Ugiuvagmiut. Rose strongly believed it. She lived it with the utmost confidence of a Ugiuvagmiu woman.

After a long illness with cancer Rose died on October 22, 2011. Rose was preceded in death by her beloved husband Anthony, her grandma Suksraq, her mother Magdeline, her father John, her sons Christopher and John, and her daughter Maria. She is survived by her sons Jerry, Bobby and his wife Mau, and daughters Marilyn and husband Hank, Pauline and husband Charles, Esther and partner Eugene, Rose Lulu and husband Larry, Margaret and partner Randall. And Rose's grandchildren: Raymond, Brian, Qutuq, Kyle, Anthony, Michael, Jens, Little Bobby, Randall Jr., Isaiah, Asaaluk and partner Bantu, Tiffany and husband Anthony, Stephanie, Sara, Kimberly, Nichole, Makayla, Minnie, Yamani, Sophia. Her great grandchildren: Awaluk, Athena, Bunninutaq, and Blaze. And many cousins

Trooper Beat

On October 14, at approximately 1:30 p.m. WAANT investigators in Anchorage contacted Larry Ivanoff Jr., 23, of Unalakleet at the Anchorage airport. During their investigation investigators seized two bags and a case of distilled spirits containing 14 - 750ml bottles of liquor. Investigation revealed an additional bottle of distilled spirits and 354.2 grams of marijuana that was packaged for distribution. Further investigation revealed that L. Ivanoff purchased and shipped an additional 14750ml bottles of distilled spirits through another carrier to Unalakleet for a total of 29 bottles of distilled spirits.

On October 27, a felony arrest warrant charging L. Ivanoff with two counts of MICS 4 and one count of Alcohol Importation/ License or Permit Required was issued for the arrest of Larry Ivanoff Jr. lvanoff was arrested in Unalakleet on November 2, in lieu of $10,000 cash/corporate bond and Third Party Custodian.

On October 28, at approximately 8:00 a.m. Herbert Barr, 44, of Elim, was arrested after investigation revealed that he assaulted a family member, assaulted the Village Police Officer in Elim and ty that did not belong to him. Alcohol was not a factor.

On October 28, the Nome grand jury indicted Gerry Koonooka, 43, of Gambell, on one count of manufacturing alcohol. On September 30, Koonooka was contacted at his residence in Gambell and was found to be brewing alcohol in the dry

On November 3, at 1:43 a.m. the Alaska State Troopers received a report of an overdue motorist on the Nome-Teller Highway. Later on the same day, searchers from Teller located Edwin Punguk. 34, of Nome, who had returned to Teller after his vehicle was stuck in the snow overnight. Punguk was in fine condition and returned to Nome during daylight and improved weather.

On November 4, at 5 a.m. AST received a report of an intoxicated person firing a gun in Wales. Troopers subsequently arrested Able Apatiki, 26, of Gambell, and remanded him to the Anvil Mountain Correctional Center. At arraignment, Apatiki plead guilty to Misconduct Involving Weapons 4, Assault 4, and Probation Violation.

On November 5, Anchorage WAANT Investigators contacted a 47-year-old male at the An-chorage Airport in the Upper One Restaurant and Lounge. The male adult was ticketed on a local air carrier with a final destination of Stebbins. Investigation revealed that the male adult was trans-porting three 1.75L bottles of R&R Whiskey to Stebbins, which is a local option community that voted to ban the sale and importation of alcoholic beverages. The alcohol was seized and one charge of Importation of Alcohol will be forwarded to the District Attorney's Office.

2011 Public Policy Fellowship Opportunity

I'd like to encourage our young leaders and individuals interested in politics to consider applying for a Public Policy Fellowship opportunity with the State Legislature during session. First Alaskans Institute has begun taking applications for the 2012 Public Policy Fellowship to place approximately two to four Alaska Native, American Indian or rural Alaskans in Juneau during the 2012 Legislative session.

This paid fellowship is 16 weeks, from January 10 to April 17. The fellowship will begin with a one-week intensive orientation. Fellows will be expected to work five days a week at the placement office with the exception of the scheduled leadership training sessions and holidays or approved days off. All fellows will be provided with housing, a round trip ticket to and from Juneau and an hourly wage.

The goal of the legislative fellowship is that emerging Native leaders will be familiar with the legislative process; will understand their own histories; will learn and use the skill of past, present and future leadership; and will know the emerging issues that confront Alaska Natives and the State of Alaska. Participants will have a real work experience that will give them hands-on experience working with the legislative and political Please visit the First Alaskans Institute at http://www.firstalaskans.org/index.cfm for more information. The application deadline is November 30, 2010.

SIU ALASKA CORPORATION

Invitation to Submit Statement of Interest For Vacant At-Large Board Seat

Siu Alaska Corporation (Siu), a wholly-owned subsidiary of Norton Sound Economic Development Corporation (NSEDC), is soliciting "Letters of Interest" to fill a vacant at-large Board of Director seat. These letters will be considered by the NSEDC Board at a Meeting of the Shareholder on December 8, 2011, for the purpose of selecting one individual to fill this at-large seat. The at-large seat may be filled by any person not affiliated with NSEDC, as a NSEDC director, as the NSEDC CEO, or as a NSEDC board committee member (including at-large committee members). The selected individual will complete the remaining portion of the seat's original three year term, which will end on November 2012.

Interested persons may submit a resume and a statement of interest:

Bv Fax: (907) 274-2249 Attn: Kathy Wheelehan By Email: Kathy@nsedc.com

The statement of interest should demonstrate an understanding of the responsibilities and time commitment required to serve as a director of an active business corporation and a willingness to take on those demands. This statement must also provide personal information that should include (i) name, address, and contact information; (ii) a brief summary of education and employment background, especially as it relates to the person's qualifications for a director position; (iii) information concerning any personal or professional interests that may be relevant to this position; and (iv) if desired, a vision statement relating to the role of director for this company.

e direct any questions about the information in this notice to Kathy Wheelehan at 1-800-650-2248

To be considered, resumes and statement of interests must be received no later than December 1, 2011.

cide prevention summit, and worked with the Alaska Native Tribal Health Consortium on creating a suicide prevention media contest. While a member of the Association of Student Governments, Baldwin worked on suicide prevention programs in Alaska, and went on to start a statewide campaign called Hope4Alaska, which provides student services and suicide prevention activities. She previously worked with Youth Alliance for a Healthier Alaska, and is reappointed to a seat reserved for a secondary school student.

Congratulations to both Lowell and Tessa; best of luck in your new appointments!

Opportunity to Comment on the Statewide Suicide Prevention Council's Five Year Plan (Before Nov. 30)

The Statewide Suicide Prevention Council has recently updated its five year state suicide prevention plan for 2012-2017. This plan was developed in close consultation with stakeholders statewide to ensure that it is relevant and accessible to all Alaskans. The Council is requesting public comment on the draft plan before 5:00 p.m. November 30, 2011.

Here is a link to the plan: Casting the Net Upstream: Promoting Wellness to Prevent Suicide in Alaska.

The plan includes strategies to meet six goals:

Alaskans Accept Responsibility for Preventing Suicide

Alaskans Effectively and Appropriately Respond to People at Risk of Suicide

Alaskans Communicate, Cooperate, and Coordinate Suicide Prevention Efforts

Alaskans Have Immediate Access to the Prevention, Treatment, and Recovery Services They Need

Alaskans Support Survivors in Healing

Quality Data and Research is Available and Used for Planning, Implementation, and Evaluation of Suicide Prevention Ef-

I encourage rural Alaskans to review the plan and consider if there is something that could be changed or added. It makes sense that comments from the regions most affected by suicide would be the most valuable.

As well as the link above, the plan is also available from the Suicide Council's Statewide Prevention (www.hss.state.ak.us/suicideprevention/), and the state suicide prevention portal: www.StopSuicideAlaska.org.

Please send all comments in writing via email, street-mail or

Yukon River Panel

I'd also like to acknowledge Myron Naneng who was recently appointed to the Yukon River Panel by the governor. The panel is focused on the conservation of salmon stocks originating from the Yukon River in Canada through development and implementation of agreed research and management programs, identification of restoration and enhancement opportunities, and submission of recommendations to management entities in Canada and Alaska. The panel also manages the new Yukon River Salmon Restoration and Enhancement Fund.

Naneng, of Bethel, serves as President of the Association of Village Council Presidents and is a member of the board of directors of the Alaska Federation of Natives and Sea Lion Corporation. He formerly served as an assistant to Governor Bill Sheffield specializing in social services, housing programs, and rural issues. Naneng holds an associate's degree in land resource management from the Kuskokwim Community College and has studied natural resources at the University of Alaska Fairbanks. He is appointed to a seat reserved for an Alaskan who represents the lower Yukon River region. I wish you best of luck and support in conservation efforts of Yukon River salmon.

STORM WATCHERS— East Front Street in Nome bore the brunt of last week's storm that pummeled Northwestern Alaska. Curious Nome residents came out to watch the high water event and ventured beyond the barricades set up by Nome emergency services volunteers.

Nome recovers after super storm

By Diana Haecker

There is nothing like a good-sized storm that gets Nomeites out on Front Street for a walk near the beach. As waves crashed over the seawall armor rock on East Front Street, depositing rocks, driftwood and other debris on the road, people came out in droves to view the spectacle and take video and photos of the angry Bering Sea on a backdrop of a colorful sunset.

The high winds that battered Nome with peak gusts of 66 mph on Tuesday night had subsided by Wednesday afternoon. The Tuesday night blizzard blew six inches of snow on Nome, which accumulated in huge snowdrifts in some areas while other areas were blown clear

After the winds died down and visibility returned, the threat of a massive storm surge worried city officials most. Low lying areas like River Street, F Street and Belmont Point flooded. Dry Creek was wet and looked like a lake all the way to Chicken Hill. The storm surge peaked on Wednesday evening with 9.95 feet above the mean low water level. In comparison, a very high tide measures two feet above that level.

However, the anticipated severity of the massive storm did not materialize because the center of the 948millibar low moved further west over Kamchatka and the wind direction during the main wind storm shifted to the east, blowing across the tundra as opposed to coming from the south as projected, which would have caused the water to surge much higher than it did. Jerry Steiger, meteorologist in charge at the Nome NWS said that the easterly winds pushed the storm-driven waves parallel to the shoreline. "We felt ex-

City declares disaster after Bering Sea storm hits Nome

By Sandra L. Medearis

The Nome Common Council is hoping that winds clocked at 66 mph on Nov. 9 along with a sea surge of 10 feet that produced flooding and evacuation of parts of Nome adjacent to the seawall and at Belmont Point will add up to emergency money coming from the state and federal sources to help pay for re-

Tuesday a federal and state team was to land in Nome to assess damage here and in the region to coordinate and ascertain the need for relief that could come in three forms: public assistance to repair public facilities, relief to individuals for damages to property and money to establish temporary housing.

Monday night in a special meeting, the Council talked to emergency relief coordination officials via telephone at a special meeting at Nome City Hall and followed up unanimously passing a resolution declaring a disaster delivered by the Bering Sea storm that wham-bammed Nome Nov. 8 and 9. The resolution holds the disaster concept only, City Manager Josie Bahnke said. True costs and complete costs of damage to Port of Nome, utilities and City facilities remain to be gathered. The resolution asks for money for estimates and cost refinement work.

The local declaration is the first step to money for storm cost relief: next, the state will consider a disaster declaration at that level. Even then, there is no guarantee that the Federal Emergency Management Agency—FEMA—will participate. The state Department of Transportation and public facilities will handle damage to the Nome-Council Road. If the damage exceeds $1 million, federal highway programs will be-

Villages hunker down to survive storm

By Sandra L. Medearis

The National Weather Service said Monday that villages on the northern and eastern coast of Norton Sound escaped heavy damages from last week's storm because the storm built up with winds from the east parallel to the shore and only started blowing from the south when the storm was weakening on its way out.

However, no village went unscathed in what was billed as the Bering Sea "superstorm' that brought snow and blowing snow with seas surging eight to 10 feet over normal. Whether the storm was a superstorm and whether it matched or exceeded the storm of 2004 remains in debate, but those who had responsibility for community safety services say the buildup in news reports pushed people to board up, evacuate vulnerable areas and get supplies to prepare for the onslaught.

As the storm was winding up to sock it to the Seward Peninsula area Tuesday at midnight, the thermometers in most villages showed temperatures in the teens while NOAA weather site showed wind blowing from the east anywhere from 53 mph over Kivalina to mid-40s mph in Nome, Shishmaref, Wales, Brevig

Mission and Unalakleet, but in the teens and 20s at the other end of Norton Sound. Shortly thereafter, as the Bering Sea storm started to really beat on Western Alaska, winds gusted to 89 mph in Wales, 85 mph in nearby Tin City, and 75-76 mph in Savoonga on St. Lawrence Island and Cape Lisburne. Well, like Yogi Berra is supposed to have said, "It is Déjà Vu all over again." All the weather news about the big Bering Sea storm took me back 60 years to probably the only time in my seagoing career that I really was in danger of losing my life.

It was 1951 and I was a CPL in the Army Transportation Corps (at Nome that summer and fall).

Most of October we were over at NE Cape on St. Lawrence Island getting diesel oil ashore to the new DEW line radar site. I was running a little (36 ft.) motor tug and had a

The Storm With No Name

Editorial

Nome came through a category #3 hurricane as the world watched. The increased use of social media put us in the spotlight. We showed the world how tough the communities of western Alaska can be. We've been through major storms before but without so much fanfare. The main reason we were able to come through so well is that we were well prepared.

The Weather Service put out the warnings days in advance. Nome's Emergency Planning folks went into action. Radio broadcasts alerted listeners of the approaching storm, folks followed its path on the internet. News alerts told folks how to prepare. The City of Nome's Public Works crews readied equipment, moved snow, gathered signs, got boats pulled to higher ground, prepared pumps and generators, made signs, readied sandbags and boarded windows. Volunteers and City crews moved items from the museum. Front Street business owners put plywood over their windows and secured anything that could be washed away by an angry Bering Sea. Residents moved garbage cans out of the wind and made sure they had enough food and batteries. Volunteer firefighters, ambulance personnel and snow removal crews stayed on alert, many kept a vigil at the Public Safety Building, fire station and power plant. Snowplows were ready to clear lanes for emergency vehicles. Nome Joint Utility crews were ready to handle downed power lines and arcing transformers. Nome Police were able to respond to folks who needed help and State Troopers were at the ready. The storm hit full force in the evening. Visibility dropped to zero and Nomeites hunkered down to weather the storm in comfort as they listened to the jet-engine roar of the pounding waves and the howl of hurricane force winds. Our houses shook and the power, cable and phone lines danced a frantic tango and one could imagine a speeding freight train passing overhead.

When the sun came up the next morning, Nomeites went out to inspect the damage and play in the wind. We came through one of the worst storms in our town's history and we did just fine thanks to the fact that we were well prepared for this storm and we have dedicated public employees and emergency service volunteers. Since this storm garnered so much attention it deserves to be called something other than "Bering Sea Storm." It qualified as a hurricane but typhoons and hurricanes get names. What are we? Let's name our storm. Any suggestions? - N.L.M.-

West Virginia hillbilly named Raikes as my helper. A Navy tanker loaded barges, a larger tug, the Kotzebue brought them in and we put them on and off the beach for unloading.

We left for Nome about Nov. 1 being towed behind two barges by the Kotzebue. We had been having trouble with water in the gas.

We ran right into one of those fall Bering Sea storms. After the second time our old manila towline broke I told Raikes "We have to get on to the Kotzebue and let this tub go.

I told Raikes that I would hold the MT alongside the bigger tug and he was to dive over the rail. Then I would bring the MT back alongside with the steering wheel lashed over and I would dive for the rail and he was to grab me. The skipper of the bigger tug slowed down as much as he could and his crew helped us. I think I got wet feet out of it. But then we wandered around the Bering Sea and Norton Sound for a week before we finally got back to Nome.

Then I later learned that the Coast Guard had called my mother in the middle of the night to tell her I was safe, and she hadn't even known I was lost. The Bureau of Indian Affairs vessel North Star had found the MT floating with no one aboard. We didn't think we were lost, we knew we were somewhere between NE Cape on St. Lawrence, the Yukon River Delta and Nome. But it was a big, stormy area.

Charlotte Brower wins North Slope borough runoff elections

By Diana Haecker

Unofficial results as of Monday, have Charlotte Brower winning the run off election for mayor of the North Slope Borough by 65 votes over runner-up George Ahmaogak.

Brower garnered 906 votes to Ahmaogak's 841 votes. The run-off elections were held on Nov. 8, after none of the six candidates received 40 percent of the votes.

According to a borough clerk, there were 74 questioned ballots. As of press time, voter turnout numbers and invalid ballots were not yet determined. The run-off election results were canvassed on Tuesday, Nov. 15.

Storm hampers search for Teller man

By Sandra L. Medearis

Teller people saw Kyle Komok setting out on a yellow four-wheeler ATV for the end of the sand spit north of town around 2 p.m. last Wednesday during last week's heavy storm. The narrow spit separates the sea from Imruk Basin.

By Monday this week, no one had seen or found Komok, 26, missing since Wednesday. Observers told Alaska State Troopers they had seen Komok riding his ATV in the waves. According to weather records, the sea on Nov. 9 reached a storm surge of eight to 10 feet.

A house-to-house search and a search of a nearby lake by Teller Search and Rescue did not find Komok. Water on the road and violent weather at the peak of the storm postponed the Teller S&R search at around 9 p.m. until dawn Wednesday. On Thursday afternoon, weather cancelled the search. The rescue group did manage to get a couple of four-wheelers out to the spit and found the spit half-washed out and no sign of Komok. Searchers took a boat out on Grantley Harbor without

Komok could have been going to look at the waves or been on his way to a destination, Megan Peters,

Alaska State Troopers information officer said. Peters said Monday that troopers could confirm no theories until Komok or his remains were Troopers stationed in Nome had been authorized to conduct a search of Imruk Basin when weather permitted, she said, but no report was available Monday. The harbor was searched the morning after Komok's disappearance, she confirmed, and points along the road from Teller to Nome had been searched for tracks to see if Komok had been picked up in a vehicle.

Low-cost energy on Council shopping list

By Sandra L. Medearis

The Nome Common Council met in work session Monday, Nov. 14 to begin drawing up a list of legislative priorities to push through for funding when the state legislature meets to hash out a spending plan for 2012 capital projects and operations.

During the session, the panel consulted with City-paid lobbyists Wendy Chamberlain and Larry Martin. At the top of the tentative list, three priorities came through loud and clear. At the top of the list, find money for water and sewer projects to support a grant application Nome Joint Utility System has into state Department of Environmental Conservation. Next, and a great big second, for the Council and NJUS, is a way to cut costs of energy in Nome area and Western Alaska.

Councilwoman Mary Knodel said the City needs to request money through state energy agencies for the loan money and expert assistance to sort out available and appropriate local energy sources-natural gas from the land or sea, hydroelectric from the Teller area, geothermal energy from Pilgrim Hot Springs, wind— and to ferret out the answers at the local level and see which way to go, rather than wait for the state to do it down the road.

"I don't think we have that expertise here. There must be someone, a guru. The Council has energy studies going back to 1978 showing gas seepage in Norton Sound 25 miles off shore and an engineering and economic analysis of natural gas production in the Norton Basin conducted by the Minerals Management It's here. They drilled in 1984 and found the gas," Emmons said. "We don't need a handout from the state, we need a loan. It is the one thing that will keep people in western Alaska. That's bringing down the cost of energy. This year's PFD [$1,174] bought 150 gallons of fuel

At the top of the list, find money for water and sewer projects to support a grant application Nome Joint Utility System has into state Department of Environmental Conservation. Next, and a great big second, for the Council and NJUS, is a way to cut costs of energy in Nome area and Western Alaska.

Carl Emmons, NJUS board member and advocate of development of natural gas or other cheaper energy, backed the idea with fervor. Saying the City needs to offset the high cost of energy now rather than later. The cost of energy was making people leave the community, he said. It was tough to hire people because they would lose their energy assistance and people could not exist here without energy assistance.

"It is getting ridiculous," he said.

oil. The cost of energy is a killer."

Rep. Neal Foster backed the idea, saying that the time was ripe to seek energy funds for rural Alaska while the legislature was pumping billions into the Susitna Dam project in southwest Alaska.

The Council was to continue work on the wish list that included needs for Port of Nome and Nome Public Schools. A regular Council meeting was scheduled for Wednesday, Nov.

come involved.

Coastal and river flooding as a result, the resolution said, had an impact on all areas along the coastal waterfront, producing road and structural damage from high water and structural damage from the high winds throughout the Nome vicinity. The severity and magnitude of losses from the emergency went beyond the capability of local resources to cover response and recovery, the City maintained.

Nome Joint Utility System's manager, John K. Handeland provided a draft report detailing effects on the municipal water and power system, showing a preliminary total of costs at $65,000, just one sector of City services that took on extra costs from the storm

Despite that high winds did not shift directly from the south to push the sea far inland, nevertheless, the surge flooded East Front Street,

River Street, West F Street, inundated the small boat harbor, West Beach Park, and required evacuation of residents along Belmont Point. The Snake and Dry Creek waterways threatened Seppala Drive, which City administration closed to traffic.

The new power plant, built above the 100-year flood plain escaped flooding, as did the old power plant protected by a protective earthen berm constructed before Snake River flooding during a fall storm in 2005. Crews had to respond to single transformer outages throughout the night and reports of downed lines, which turned out to be TV and phone lines. A power interruption affected the Triple Creek-Dexter areas for 16.5 hours and went out in a part of the town for an hour Wednesday morning when the wind wrapped airborne metal roofing around primary wires. The Rock Creek mine feeder stayed off for 33 hours, but their emergency generators took over to keep NJUS crews in town. City water continued to supply homes and businesses throughout the storm.

Storm water running into wet wells at the sewer and water treatment plant on River Street produced the potentially major issue when it overwhelmed the pumps, making 165,000 gallons of raw wastewater flow into the emergency discharge to the small boat harbor. Estimates say the wastewater became diluted when it mixed with approximately 864,000 of storm water before pumps could be restarted when water around the River Street facility receded and storm drains regained the ability to back water off the wet wells. DEC was informed and monitored the incident, Handeland said.

Handeland said it would take time to draw up a complete account of costs to the utility to prepare for and respond to storm issues, repair damage and clean up debris from the emergency.

Here is a preliminary estimate from the NJUS damage assessment:

Power plant-personnel, equipment costs and materials, supplies and fuel, $10,500. The utility had extra costs to protect facilities and maintain power stability with personnel required for standby in advance of zero visibility weather conditions.

Line distribution-personnel, equipment and materials, supplies and fuel, $29,500. The storm caused extra costs for response to outages, reports of wires down and repair of service drops and wire spans.

Water and sewer operations and construction - $21,000. Extra expense came from protecting facilities, installing barricades and responding to equipment stoppages caused by extensive flooding. Following the storm, crews had to clean up storm-strewn debris

geted costs resulted from having to prepare, monitor and coordinate response activities, respond to customer calls, document and track costs associated with emergency response efforts.

Lost revenue from Rock Creek feeder outage, $3,500.

Again, so far, the preliminary cost estimate for NJUS damage assessment comes to $65,000

Mayor Denise Michels expressed thanks to the Alaska Rescue Coordination Center for their outreach to the community of Nome and commended community agencies and volunteers who worked throughout the storm to preserve safety.

"What a way for a community to come together," in a crisis, she said.

District Improvement Plan driven by data

A 2011 District Improvement Plan meeting on November 10 brought together an impressive think tank including both the elementary and high school principals, the superintendent, the business manager, school board members, teachers, PTSA leaders and a school counselor. Jon Berkeley, director of federal programs, presented some interesting data as he encouraged questions and input before preparing a District Improvement Plan to be submitted to the State. The plan is required due to Nome Public School's status with Adequate Yearly Progress (AYP).

Berkeley began his presentation citing efforts made at the elementary level to improve scores, which included a focus on the Read 90 program. A math intervention teacher has been reassigned to Read 90 duties, and instructional aides have been trained and reassigned to Read 90. There has been training of all staff in the Reading Mastery Intervention Program. In addition, the AP3 Grant (preschool pilot program) continues for year three which has placed two certified pre-kindergarten teachers at the Kawerak Head Start building.

At the junior and senior high level, several changes or additions have been implemented including the successful APEX credit recovery program, a seven period school day, an addition of one counselor (two total), and additions of a small engine repair and junior high art class. CTE (Career and Technical Education) classes are "in the works" to keep older students interested in school as well.

Both school sites are also driven by the Nome Public Schools Strategic Plan.

Berkeley's data compared cohort groups of students that took the MAP (Measures of Academic Progress) in May 2011 and again in October 2011. Most groups showed no movement, up or down, which made sense since there isn't much instructional time between May and October. However, each group of students had its own personality.

This year's third grade students showed 60 percent scoring below proficiency at reading. Contrast that to the current fourth graders, who only had 40 percent scoring below proficiency reading. What could explain the difference? Janeen Sullivan, counselor, suggested the idea that this year's fourth graders are almost 2:1 girl to boy and girls tend to outscore boys on tests.

Then there were last year's fourth graders, this year's fifth graders - 89 percent of those 37 students were reading below proficiency in October. Berkeley pointed out that ten students, all who read at or above proficiency, were not included in that cohort group due to a transfer to the Anvil City Science Academy at the end of their fourth grade year.

And the students with the most dramatic data would be last year's fifth graders, this year's sixth graders. In May 2011, 72 percent were reading below proficiency and that same group in October tested at 56 percent below proficiency, a 16 percent decrease. Summer school and the strength of the new 56'ers program may account for some of that growth in reading.

Overall, there was a 2 percent increase in reading proficiency of the matched cohort —160 students from spring 2011 (then grades 2-5) to fall 2011 (current grades 3-6). "It's an improvement. We'll take it," stated Berkeley.

Graduation rates were also discussed. In 2009, the NPS graduation rate was 71 percent, in 2010 it was 73.2 percent and in 2011 it was 65.7 percent. Apparently the formula to determine the rate may be more complex than one might imagine. It involves division with the numerator being the number of graduates receiving a diploma (certificates of achievement don't count) divided by the number of ninth graders four years prior. To make the percentage appear worse, any ninth grader who drops out and later receives a GED will not be considered a graduate four years later in the graduation rate. One bright spot is that the state does calculate another graduation rate for each group of ninth graders after five years and accepts the best percentage for the rate.

Berkeley also shared 6th grade drop out indicators:

- Has failed or is currently failing
- Language Arts and/or Math • Demonstrates behavior issues
- Poor attendance

- Has limited home support
- · Likely to have repeated a grade
- Likely to have a reading deficit that has not been diagnosed
- Likely to demonstrate problems in managing time, workloads, and
- Likely to become disengaged in

He explained that if a sixth grade student could be identified with four or five of these indicators, it was a strong predictor of drop out poten-

Attendance was another topic at the meeting. Berkeley said the district's attendance rate was about 90 or 91 percent. "Our attendance rate has been pretty good. It's just a small population of chronic truancies....well... absenteeism, whether it's unexcused or excused.'

Berkeley explained that he planned to focus on three areas in the District Improvement Plan: Read 90 program, graduation rate and reducing dropouts.

School Board prepares legislative priorities

By Lori Head

The Nome Board of Education held a special meeting on November 10 to discuss and approve legislative priorities. Board members Betsy Brennan, Barb Nickels and Jennifer Reader were present.

With the guidance of Michael Brawner, NPS superintendent, the school board determined four FY 12 priorities:

Protection Systems – It is estimated to cost $283,000 to bring building "D", which houses Anvil City Science Academy (Charter School), Dept. of Transportation offices, NPS district offices and the superintendent's quarters into building code compliance with fire alarm upgrades and a sprinkler fire suppression system. Last year's NPS priority of a sprinkler/fire alarm upgrade was awarded $90,000 by the Legislature, which should cover the cost of the design and a portion of this FY 12 priority.

Nome Elementary School Gym Floor Replacement - Brennan commented that this priority has been on the list for approximately five to six years. The estimated cost is between $100,000 and $160,000. A company that specializes in school gym flooring indicated a new floor industry standard shock resilience value is approximately 14 percent, and the NES gym floor has approximately a 3 percent value due to its "extreme age." Considering the constant use during school, after school and for community events by Nome organizations, a new gym floor would be an excellent investment and impact many residents.

Lighting Upgrade to the Nome Elementary School — This priority would replace existing, expensive, high energy consumption lighting with energy efficient LED equipment, according to a letter Brawner sent to Josie Bahnke, Nome City Manager. The estimated cost to replace all equipment would be the energy saving lights at $72,063. Brawner wrote to the City, "Please consider funding this project with this year's Community Benefit Share." The Community Benefit Share Program is a $100,000 remittance made to municipal governments from Norton Sound Economic Development Corporation to each of its member communities.

Nome Beltz High (NBHS) HVAC Direct Digital Control (DDC) Project Phase II — This priority is an extension of work completed at NES where DDC technology controls all aspects of the environment and hot water heat. Due to recent renovations, the NBHS gym and cafeteria are under the DDC system. However, the rest of the school needs to be updated so that energy and maintenance savings can be realized. The estimated cost of this priority is $250,000 to

These four facility priorities, along with other joint priorities with Alaska Association of School Boards, were submitted to the Nome Common Council on Monday, November 14.

extremely fortunate that the winds didn't turn to the straight south," said Nome Joint Utilities manager and lifelong Nome resident John Handeland. "If so, we would've been in a world of pain."

In Nome, Snake River Valley, Dexter, Banner Creek and Triple Creek no storm related deaths or injuries were reported. Even so the full picture of damages has not been assessed yet at press time. Some storm casualties include washed out sections of the Nome-Council highway, some damage to the Mini Convention Center, the destruction of a construction staging weather port at the new hospital site and the loss of a roof that flew off Jim Simple's

NJUS manager John Handeland reports that storm water seeped into the sewage holding tanks. Pumps designed to pump sewage out of the underground holding tanks to the sewage lagoons couldn't keep up with the sheer volume of liquids. With the storm water rushing in from the surface, the pumps couldn't keep up and NJUS turned them off for 12 hours to prevent them from burning out. 165,000 gallons of sewage water mixed with storm water and ended up in the small boat harbor. NJUS reported this to the State Department of Environmental Conservation and city emergency personnel. The pumps were turned on again on early Thursday as the storm water subsided.

Power went out in the city when on Wednesday morning a piece of metal roof flashing flew into primary power lines near the Carrie M. McLain Museum. The outage lasted for almost two hours. The longest outage concerned residents of the Beam Road, out to Dexter and Banner Creek. The outage lasted for 16 hours from 2 a.m. on Wednesday morning until 8 p.m. Newton and the Anvil Mountain area also lost power for four hours.

For a while, telephone services were down as the city phones, police phones and private phones were out of order for a short time. However, TelAlaska, through a spokesperson in Anchorage, said that technicians monitored the situation for 24 hours and that there were no known outages to local services at all.

Phone service was also interrupted when the front of a building on First Avenue was blown off by the storm and ripped a phone line.

Nome is storm ready

As soon as the National Weather Service alerted western Alaska that a massive storm was brewing in the Bering Sea on Monday, city officials started to get ready. City officials, emergency services and all major players met to plan setting up the incident command center.

On Tuesday at 8 a.m. the Incident Command was ready to roll, with acting city manager Chip Leeper, in absence of city manager Josie Bahnke, at the helm as the incident commander. Operations Chief was Jim West Jr., Planning Chief was police boss John Papasodora; harbormaster Joy Baker acted as Logistics Chief; and Tom Vaden was in charge of safety.

Steiger, also a volunteer firefighter, said that if anything, this event proved that Nome has the designation as a storm ready community for a reason. From the perspective as residents, also on St. Lawrence Island, said Gambell usually is windy, but that the sea was very high Wednesday noon. The NWS reported gusts of wind at 76 mph early Tuesday evening.

Little Diomede, near the center of the storm, had winds that started off at 47 mph Tuesday night and gusted to over 100 mph at the peak of the storm Wednesday.

"It was scary," said Kara Kazing-nok of Diomede. "A two-story house was really shaking. "

The storm surge flooded the water treatment plant that is near water's edge and damaged the door, she said. Over the weekend, crews were cleaning the floor littered with trash carried in with the water and working to get water flowing again.

The village was prepared.

"Before the storm we had a community meeting," Kazingnok said.
"We were ready for it. We pulled the boats off the beach away from harm.

Water moved Connex vans around Diomede, according to Samantha Menadelook, village clinic employee. Construction workers from the school project helped to move unused oil tanks from being tossed around. Although power was turned off in the community for safety, the clinic used its backup power. Menadelook set up a backup clinic on higher ground. "It was real windy. I took a trauma bag up to the city office in case we had to close the clinic," Menadelook said. The storm damaged part of the foundation of the fire department building, she

Searchers on four wheelers and by boat have been searching the area. During the storm, water surrounded the older, lower part of town, and residents were urged to evacuate to the higher new housing area. Water filled low areas around the clinic and the school.

In Golovin the GCI facility was submerged, but Monday the village clinic had a landline. Clinic employee Ruthie Peterson said Internet had been out but had been restored over the weekend. Downtown areas very close to the clinic, but water was receding, Peterson said. Several families who could not get to their houses found sanctuary with relatives. Unfortunately, Peterson said, ice driven by the wind and sea surge onto a campsite six miles northeast of Golovin had damaged cabins and fish racks. Peterson expected FEMA representatives to arrive Tuesday to further assess the damage.

In Koyuk, people lost their fish racks again, as happened five or six

Several villages shut off water, power or both to protect their sources as floods rose. Diomede turned off water, as the water treatment plant is near the beach. Elim also turned off their water source as a creek rose a fire department volunteer, Steiger said the fire department was standing by and helped the city by closing off streets near the coast. "We had six to 12 people at the fire hall to be ready for most of the event and then scaled it down to three people," said Steiger.

Operations Chief Jim West, Jr. said that one family from Belmont Point chose to evacuate to the Rec Center, which was the official shelter. The fire department was ready for the worst, standing by with a loader in case of a fire, which was the worst fear of emergency responders. But as the storm ripped through Nome at night, emergency responders only received one call that turned out to be Incident commander Chip Leeper said that all through the night the command center—located at the new Public Safety building- monitored the situation. "It was good to be out there, away from the hub-bub of the excitement," said Leeper. Ambulance and fire fighter volunteers were staged at the ambulance barn and Fire Hall, to cut down on response time if something should happen.

Tom Vaden, in charge of safety, said that in the past the worst fires in Nome occurred around this time of the year and his main concern was a fire event that combined with high winds would've been a disaster.

But all in all, Vaden, said things went well. He echoed Jerry Steiger's sentiment that Nome is a storm ready community. "There is this attitude of preparedness," Vaden said. "I think Nome is storm ready and that is a big

Front Street businesses were ready for the worst and equipped to battle storm water entering the basements. Tony Parsons with the Bering Straits Development Corporation said that the weather service warnings gave him ample time to prepare for one of his clients, the Wells Fargo Bank, to get pumps and generators in place prior to the actual storm surge. Breakers Bar's Ron Lock said that at times they were ankle-deep in water seeping into the basement, but nothing worse than a few boxes of garbage bags got wet. Lock said he was thankful for all the people that showed up and helped bailing out the water, bringing extra water pumps. "It was a community effort," Lock said. "There was a time when it looked like Mother Nature was going to win this, but then it backed down,' Lock said.

Anchor Liquor owner Mark Sackett said he and his crew worked pretty much all night to pump water out of their basement. "It felt like we pumped 100 gallons out and at the same time, 800 gallons came in,"

Sackett said. But luckily, he said, there is no damage to speak of.

Wednesday evening saw the worst of the wave action pounding the shoreline. Just before sunset, people went for a drive to see the debris piling up on Front Street. East Front Street, and the first few miles of the Nome-Council Highway east of the Nome Bypass Road were also littered with rocks, tree stumps and dirt. As the storm had passed and the ocean calmed down, the incident command center stood down on Wednesday night.

By the time the first sunrays touched Front Street on Thursday mid-morning, there was not a rock left on the roads. The city's Public Works crew cleared Port Road, which was also flooded, and pushed thick plates of ice off the east side of the inner harbor and F Street. Department of Transportation crews fired up their graders at 6:30 a.m. and before people got on their way to work, the roads were cleaned up.

DOT personnel went on an aerial survey to assess the damage to the Nome-Council Highway and report a clear single lane from Nome out to Safety, about mile 25. Beyond that the road is impassable, both from winter conditions as well as huge amounts of debris from the storm. Through DOT spokeswoman Meadow Bailey, the local crew report, "There are large sections of road that appear to be washed out and some that simply is not detectable due to the enormous amount of beach gravel and sand covering the roadway. Damage is considerable, we will need to conduct a thorough assessment to identify our needs to repair or reconstruct this

They report large washouts and very large riprap washed up onto and over the road surface.

Initial assessments show that the area's airports are operating and did not sustain significant damage. Unalakleet had very high water and may suffer some washouts along airport property but the operating surfaces are fine. A few others will need further assessment as standing water drains away. "Overall, we're in good shape on the airports thanks to both state and contractor preparedness." DOT spokeswoman Bailey said.

Even before the storm was over, a different sort of onslaught hit Nome. Media requests for interviews, photographs of the storm and sensational video footage bombarded the city's emergency services administrator and The Nome Nugget. At the Nugget, the phones rang off the hook, fielding requests by international media like Al Jazeera from Dubai to national media CNN, L.A. Times and various news and photo agencies.

While schools had early dismissal on Tuesday, school was out on Wednesday and back in session on Thursday. The stores were open on Wednesday again and life went back to normal on Thursday morning. Many compared the storm to the storm of 1974 or 2004.

A bar keeper at the Board of Trade said that the city didn't even know what was coming their way in 1974. But now, technology allows for better forecasting tools and the fact that previous storms taught town residents and city officials to be prepared.

Jim West, Jr. said that the storm was equivalent to the '74 storm, but back then, the high water was recorded at 14 feet above the mean level. West, Jr. summed up the collective sentiment when he said, "We got lucky. If the winds would've come from the south, that would've put us in a real predicament."

Coping now with the paper work that comes after the storm, city officials are starting to tally up the damage, "We survived the storm of 2011 and hope that it is the last for this century," said Handeland.

Lowering your risk is like building a seawall

By Bob Lawrence, MD Alaska Family Doctor

Cardiovascular disease is the leading preventable cause of death and disability in the United States. According to the American Heart Association, Americans spend more on treating heart disease in all its forms than they spend on any other health care problem. The effects of this devastating wave have reached the Norton Sound region. Unless current trends are turned back, cardiovascular disease will become the greatest health threat to this region.

Control and Prevention recognize four important areas to control in order to prevent heart disease. Think of these as four big vital signs that, if controlled, form a protective wall against the cardiovascular storms that threaten the heart and brain.

Association, and the Center for Disease

nerves. High blood pressure, obesity, diabetes, and harmful cholesterol are like the waves in this eroding disease. They cause damage gradually,

sometimes for decades as symptoms

1. Blood Pressure. Research shows that people who follow their home blood pressure readings and take appropriate measures to keep their blood pressure in a healthy range significantly reduce their risk of having a heart attack, suffering a stroke, or developing kidney failure.

According to the American Heart Association, a healthy blood pressure goal is lower than 140/90 for an otherwise healthy individual. A lower goal of 130/80 is recommended by the AHA and the National Kidney Foundation for anyone with known heart disease, history of brain vessel disease, or signs of kidney disease. The lower goal of 130/80 is also recommended by the American Diabetes Association because diabetes is considered a cardiovascular disease equivalent.

2. Blood Sugar Level. Blood sugar, or blood glucose, measured after an eight-hour fast provides helpful information regarding a person's risk of cardiovascular disease. The risk of heart and vascular disease increases exponentially as fasting blood sugar increases above 125 mg/dL (the level that defines diabetes mellitus II).

People with diabetes should check their blood sugar daily, if not multiple times daily. People who are at an increased risk of diabetes due to obesity, heart disease, or a family history of diabetes should monitor their fasting glucose annually under the guidance of a physician. The American Diabetes Association also recognizes the Hemoglobin A1c test as an alternate way to monitor the average blood glucose over a three-month period.

3. Body Mass Index. Researchers follow the body mass index (BMI), a ratio of weight to height, to determine a person's risk of developing cardiovascular disease. A BMI between 18.5 and 24.9 is considered healthy. A person with a BMI between 24.5 and 29.9, considered overweight, has an increased risk of weight-related problems. A person with a BMI of 30 or above (for example, a 5 foot 10 inch person over 210 lbs) is defined as medically obese with an increased risk of developing cardiovascular disease.

4. Cholesterol and Triglyceride Levels. Knowing the level cholesterol and fat in the blood is important because the pattern of having a low

HDL (good cholesterol) and high triglycerides is called dyslipidemia, a pattern known to be associated with underlying problems in the cardio-vascular system. In general, the healthiest pattern is a total cholesterol less than 200 mg/dL, with an elevated good cholesterol (HDL) above 45 mg/dL in men and above 55 mg/dL in women, and a triglyceride level below 150 mg/dL.

These numbers provide valuable feedback regarding a person's current health status and future risk of developing heart disease. They are often provided as a part of an annual exam. Over time, a general trend in the numbers can show whether a person is becoming healthier, becoming less healthy, or maintaining current overall cardiovascular health.

Most people find these numbers can be improved for the better, often dramatically, with attention to a healthy diet, daily physical activity, and avoidance of harmful behaviors like smoking.

Knowing these numbers is the first step towards protecting the heart from the harmful, often expensive, effects of cardiovascular disease.

Power Saver

Arctic Broadcasting Association, Inc., licensee of KICY, has announced the installation of new power saving technology. Through an experimental license granted by the Federal Communications Commission in July of this year, KICY has installed the Harris acc+ circuitry into their DX50, a 50kw AM broadcast transmitter.

Simply stated, the circuitry turns down the AM carrier in times of silence. There were concerns about diminished audio quality in the station's fringe coverage area, but it appears those fears were unfounded. The first day of testing, a listener called from Anchorage, nearly 550 miles to the southeast of Nome and commented on the excellent signal strength and audio quality. There have been subsequent listener calls and positive comments from as far away as Bristol Bay.

The first power bill from Nome

Joint Utilities has just arrived and there is additional good news. Doubling the power, while the new acc+circuitry was switched on beginning September 22nd, actually produced a reduction of overall power usage and savings of nearly $1,500 for the four weeks in the billing cycle!

"This represents a huge savings for us as energy costs continue to escalate in Northwest Alaska," stated General Manager Dennis Weidler. "With base costs, fuel adjustment costs and peak demand charges, we are currently paying over 35 cents per kilowatt hour here in Nome. When operating a 50,000 watt AM station 24 hours a day, those costs were becoming staggering. This new acc+ circuitry is an answer to prayer."

NSEDC News

By Dan Harrelson, NSEDC Chairman and Don Stiles, Siu Alaska Corp. Chairman Courtesy of Communications Director, Tyler Rhodes

As long as there has been a Norton Sound Economic Development Corporation, one individual has been pointing fingers and throwing accusations without any regard to the truth or consequences of his actions.

We at NSEDC and Siu Alaska Corp., however, must be held accountable for our words and deeds. It is a standard we willingly accept.

NSEDC ordinarily declines to respond to this individual's rants for a number of reasons. A response gives the letter-writer the attention he craves and somehow lends validity to his nearly weekly, tired tirades.

He has sued NSEDC in the past, is currently involved in litigation against NSEDC and has frequently threatened future lawsuits. This type of behavior does not leave us eager to engage the individual in conversation or a public debate in the newspaper.

But there comes a point when the false allegations and misinformation

But there comes a point when the false allegations and misinformation must be addressed so that readers do not start accepting this individual's misguided and often untrue statements as fact. The following answers some of the more outrageous claims he is currently leveling at NSEDC.

LIE: Siu Alaska Corporation lost millions of dollars in 2009.

TRUTH: Siu Alaska booked a net profit in 2009 of $2.7 million. The assertion that Siu lost $4.2 million in 2009 is categorically wrong. Siu actually booked, before taxes, a net income of $2.7 million in 2009 and $5.8 million in 2010. Siu is on track to again be profitable in 2011. As an entity in its first years of operation, Siu invests its profits into assets that will, in turn, produce profits. As Siu builds its asset base, it will pay dividends back to NSEDC, its one and only shareholder.

MYTH: Siu stands to lose millions by investing in the shoreside pollock fleet.

TRUTH: Siu is on track to realize a return of approximately 20 percent on its investment in Alaska Boat Co. this year.

Siu's investment in the Alaska Boat Co. vessels has proved to be a wise business decision. Far from losing money, the investment has yielded a phenomenal return that will likely top 20 percent in the first year. The vessels harvested their quota well before the season's end during a year when many other vessels were unable to catch their total quota. The Alaska Boat Co. vessels achieved this success while nearly completely avoiding the bycatch of Chinook salmon and predominately performing well in regard to chum bycatch in a year when chum were present in high numbers throughout the fishing grounds. The Alaska Boat Co. fleet is well-managed and in good condition to fish far into the future.

MYTH: Siu's investment in shoreside boats shows it doesn't care about bycatch. TRUTH: By investing in the shoreside fleet, Siu has the opportunity to reduce that sector's impact on salmon returning to our communities.

Siu was well aware of the shoreside fleet's bycatch rates before making this investment. These boats would be fishing whether Siu invested in them or not. By being involved with this sector, Siu has the opportunity to further improve the performance of boats that already had a good reputation in terms of bycatch. This season's results prove this out.

According to plan, the Alaska Boat Co. vessels harvested their quota before the time period when Chinook salmon are more present in the fishery. Chum salmon showed strong returns in rivers this year and were present in high numbers in the pollock fishing grounds. The entire fleet had trouble avoiding chum this year, including a couple of the Alaska Boat Co. vessels. Despite their best efforts, a couple of boats ended up with tows that resulted in higher numbers of chum. Whenever this occurred, our boats moved to avoid salmon or stopped fishing altogether. Even so, based on a synopsis of weekly reports this year, Alaska Boat Co. vessels averaged a single chum salmon for every three metric tons of pollock they harvested this season. This is an average that is approximately 20 percent better than the chum bycatch rate for the rest of the shoreside fleet.

LIE: Information on Siu's finances is not disclosed to NSEDC board members.

TRUTH: NSEDC board members receive financial statements related to Siu both in person and in the mail.

Several members of NSEDC's board of directors sit on the Siu board. In addition, all NSEDC board members are presented with a separate Siu Alaska Corp. financial report at the time NSEDC's audited financial statements for the year are produced. They received and reviewed a preliminary version of this report in person at a meeting this May. The final version of the numbers was mailed to each board member in June.

MYTH: Bycatch by the pollock trawl fleet is destroying salmon returns to Norton Sound.

TRUTH: The National Marine Fisheries Service estimates that bycatch by the pollock fleet takes less than 1 percent of the chum salmon returning to Western Alaska.

Federal studies have estimated that bycatch by the pollock fleet over the last 15 years has taken an average of 6 out of every 1,000 chum salmon returning to coastal Western. That's an average of 0.6 percent.

Breakers and crew weather the storm

By Cussy Kauer

The evening of Thursday, November 3 I checked my email as I usually do when I get home. There was one from Judy O'Donnoghue from Kodiak telling me of the news of the passing of Ruth Brechan. I only met Joe O'Donnoghue late this July in the Breakers as he and his wife traveled to Nome to see what we were like. We spent the evening reminiscing old Nome, old Alaska, and a common friend of ours, old Ruth. Ruth Gottschalk Brechan, as I knew her, had sold her Breakers Bar to my first husband and me in the early 1970s. Ruth and I kept in contact over the years, and I knew she was working on writing her life story, which she hoped to publish before she died.

In 2006 I sent her a copy of a Nome article out of a Saturday Evening Post magazine I found on EBay, which featured her, and the Breakers. The photo from that article I sent her graces the back of her book which she did get published early this year called Trails and Tales of a Pioneer. I called the bar Friday morning and shared the announcement with Tony. I doubted there was any one there who would remember Ruth Brechan. Here's to you, Ruth, I thought, and in my mind hoisted a glass of good cheer. You were a grand ol' gal for Nome, and Kodiak, and Alaska. This one's for you.

Laying on my couch Sunday evening, November 6 watching the news, bringing my ringing phone closer to my ear I was hearing the unmistakable drawl of my friend Joy.

While bycatch by the pollock fleet makes up a small piece of the complex puzzle of factors that affect salmon returns, NSEDC's board, staff and partners are united in seeing that impact further reduced. A plan is in the works to reduce the pollock fishery's impact on chum salmon, which is not the case for other fisheries that intercept several times more chum than that taken by the pollock fleet. As this process continues at the federal level, NSEDC and Siu are supportive of measures that will make a real and significant impact in reducing the bycatch of fish that are bound for our rivers.

LIE: NSEDC and Siu actively work to hide information from the public. TRUTH: NSEDC and Siu give the public updates and information throughout the year. NSEDC sends newsletters and annual reports to every mailbox in the region every year. NSEDC and Siu also distribute press releases and announcements on their websites. NSEDC has offices in Nome and Unalakleet, and has community outreach liaisons in the remaining 13 member communities. As a regional nonprofit, NSEDC recognizes its responsibility to inform the region's residents about its operations and the opportunities it creates. Unlike many other similar organizations, NSEDC chooses to keep its board meetings open to the public and announces them in the newspaper. NSEDC and Siu also operate in the highly competitive, for-profit world of commercial fishing. This requires that some information remain privileged, often in order to protect the interests of our partner companies.

"Cussy, NOAA weather is describing this as a monster, major." Joy Baker, our Port of Nome harbormaster, ever vigilant with her watchful eyes and ears, concerned for the exposure and protection of our assets, our town, knows what a worry wart I am when it comes to storms, high water, and the Breakers Bar. I got up, and printed out the area forecast discussion to read. There was much comparison to the 1974 storm. "In a few words...the origins and paths of these storms are slightly different...but their destinations are the same." Damn, I thought. That would be the Breakers.

My memory is still vivid of 37 years ago, November 11. I had the day off from my regular job, and spent 12 hours driving taxi for Yellow Cab along with my co-worker Edna Buffas during the onslaught of that catastrophe. The tales of that event are many, and long. The back south end of the Breakers Bar building was destroyed, and the pool table ended up at the center post of the bar. Then, in the 2004 storm, Breakers sustained considerable damage, and we lost the entire fall barge order of inventory Herbie Locke had just put away. Sadly, or gladly, he was not with us to witness that October Alaska Day event. From it, we learned a valuable lesson, and since have stored our inventory up at least three pallets high. This gives us a fighting chance if we are taking water. It made the 2005 storm a cakewalk.

Nome and all our neighbors up and down the entire west coast of Alaska listened, and prepared, while our radio station announcers continued providing notice of the approach of this coming storm. Monday we spent moving all paper products off the floor, boarding up the south end windows overlooking the Bering Sea and Nome's seawall, extremely susceptible to damage from flying rocks and logs. We were checking tank straps, cleaning sump pumps, checking auxiliary pumps, doing everything possible to mitigate any destruction, damage, or loss. I took a deep breath. Mother Nature, I prayed, have mercy on us.

Tuesday these warnings came more frequently, and as the storm approached with more intensity, so was the sound in the radio announcer's voice: intense. The storm was huge, and we became a hot topic on the Weather Channel. Facebook began filling with well wishes and prayers for the safety of all of us out here on the Seward Peninsula and coastal Western Alaska. Tuesday night the fore running blizzard was on us. I called one of our local taxi companies and asked them to notify me when they were going to pull their cabs off the roads. This would coincide with bar closure in order to get our patrons home safely. I prepared to drive our closing bartender, my daughter Krysta, home and, terrified, knew I had to make my way back to the bar. Ron Locke had informed me just as we were preparing to leave that he was seeing water on the floor at the south end of the basement. This was his first rodeo. I've been the girl in the basement for other events. I knew all too well what was ahead, and had been bracing myself mentally for the past two days. At 1:30 a.m. Wednesday, I picked up my floor squeegee push broom, and took my position in the basement.

As the southerly winds push the water table up under Nome, so goes the water under the Breakers basement, and ocean content presents itself through the cement floor. By 4 a.m. the two of us were unable to keep up, pushing the incoming sea to the sump pumps, and my call went out for help. Within minutes crewmen Mike Saclamana, Tom Koyuk and Jeff Milligrock were at our side. After an hour or so, I explained to all what was going to continue to happen, and pointed out where they would see water, as I prepared to run home and try to catch a couple hours sleep. As I dozed for an hour, little did I know we lost power, and the men were loading buckets heavy with water up the stairs to send down

Bless John Handeland and the Nome Joint Utilities, the power came back on, and electric pumping resumed. By 10 a.m. Wednesday an extra pump was putting water onto Front Street through about 100 feet of hose. George Leckband stopped in to check on us, ran to pick up breakfast-lunch for our water crew, and brought back his gas generator just in case we needed it.

We called for more pumps. Randy Pomeranz came by, and went to get one of Carl Emmons's pumps. Carl Emmons - we are usually joined at the hip during these storms, but he was out of town. Brother-in-law Stacey Green and sister Mary offered help. Two young ladies, and I am sorry I didn't catch their names, patrons that afternoon, called their people who I believe are associated with Nome's newest gold mining company, Nome Gold Alaska. They brought in a new pump and hose. Mike Winkleman brought pumps and hoses. I apologize if I've missed some names, but things were getting hectic, and I was out looking for dry boots for our men.

The hours dragged on. Gale force winds whipped us from the southeast, then south, and the sea surge continued. The phone was ringing with radio and TV stations from the rest of America, Arizona, California and New York looking for live feeds, skype interviews, and the like. All I could relay to them was to tell their audiences to cross their fingers and pray for all of us. We were too busy laying hose and starting more pumps, and darkness would be fast approaching. Ha! The only live feed I wanted to see was another hose hooked to another pump with water squirting out the end of it onto Front Street.

Thirteen hours of pushing— the speed at which the sea water was still coming through the floor was high, and Dave Antonson-Ciski and Mike Goldie provided some relief to our salt water men, as they pushed water several hours toward the drains and pumps. The water boys of the Breakers were exhausted.

Seventeen hours of pushing-we had one more meal together as fresh horses, or horse, in the form of Olaf Walters, came to help us contain the incoming water. I told Ron Locke, "You get your first gold star for your first storm." Someone looked outdoors. The waves didn't seem so high. The ocean was quieting to a dull roar. The wind speed was dropping. Seawater was coming in more slowly, and we found ourselves over capacity with the pumps. Olaf and I started the slow, methodical shutdown of them, and he began dragging disconnected hoses, which were now starting to ice up, back into the bar. By 1:30 a.m. Thursday,

Ella Eningowuk

Ella Eningowuk was born in Shishmaref on March 28, 1924. She actually used her baptismal date as her date of birth, May 15, 1925, and her family wanted that date on her cross since she always used that as her birth date.

She grew up with her parents William and Wilsa Allockeok in and around Shishmaref and Arctic River.

Her parents were reindeer herders, as others were in Shishmaref. She had two brothers Al (Unaliinga) and Johnson (Paniulak), and two sisters Kara Ahgupuk and Elsie Weyiouanna. Her parents also raised Koonuk Angusuc and MaryAnn Allockeok Bahnke.

She learned a lot about sewing from her mother and sisters—back then most clothing was sewn from skins. She became a well-known skin sewer and did much beautiful work for others, including David Green of Anchorage. She married Perry Eningowuk and together they had three children: Johnson, Eleanor and Al Jacob

Ella Agmaguna Eningowuk resided in Shishmaref, Nome, Anchorage, and Fairbanks and possibly many more places. She died at Alaska Native Medical Center on

Ruth Spicer Brechan

Ruth Spicer Brechan died peacefully in her sleep on Thursday, November 3, at the age of 95. Ruth was born July 27, 1916 in Hardscrabble, ID. Hardscrabble, coincidentally, describes much of her early years. Her adventurous father wasn't inclined to stay at home and her mother remarried and moved away. So, Ruth and her older sister Ellen were more often than not, left to fend for themselves as children.

Ruth had more challenges ahead, as her first husband was "a little too liberal with his fists." At the age of 19 (1935) Ruth took her 18-monthold son Walter Nestell, a six shooter, and a twenty dollar bill to head for the Territory of Alaska on a steamship. In Anchorage she met and married Harry Gottschalk. They moved from Anchorage to Fairbanks where their daughter Gail was born. During her time in Fairbanks she began working as a hatcheck girl, waitressing and bartending to save money for the goal of someday becoming a business

Ruth and Harry moved to Juneau for a short time, and then on to Nome. In Nome, Ruth purchased a shoe store that she renovated into the first Breakers Bar. She had a soft heart for people in need, and in Nome that was no exception. She helped the Native girls in so many ways, and received the nickname of 'Mama Ruthie.'

Sometime later she found out Harry was "running" some girls on the side in Anchorage, and as was her straightforward way, hit him upside the head with a very large frying pan and told him to get out! They divorced shortly thereafter. In Nome, Ruthie met the love of her life, Fred Brechan. He was the master mechanic for Morrison Knudsen Construction (MK). They married in Carson City, Nevada in 1951.

Much to Fred's delight, Ruth was an avid fisherman and hunter. In Nome, she tracked and shot two polar bears. She was a great camp cook and could skin better than most. Needless to say, she was always invited on Fred's hunting trips.

MK eventually ran out of work in Alaska and with that, MK asked Fred to move to Africa. In no uncertain terms Ruth said she wouldn't take the kids there. So they chose to stay in Alaska. Fred and Ruth moved to Kodiak in 1954, where they purchased a building, which became the second Breakers Bar. She and Fred went to Navy surplus auctions, picking up equipment that Fred refurbished. Soon Brechan Enterprise came to fruition. Ruth and Fred also bought a World War II barge that they named the Lex; thus, the beginning of their fishing businesses.

Together they enjoyed the challenges and adventures of sharing many other varied business ventures, including fish processing (an All Alaskan partner, that is now Trident Seafood of Kodiak), raising Brahma bulls and tree farming in Costa Rica, gold mining, logging, home building, and many other small business endeavors. A very thoughtful venture was the elderly living home that Ruth, Fred, and Lou and Fran Iani built in 1972. It stuck in their craw that elderly Kodiakans were being shipped off elsewhere, so they did something about it and built a 54unit complex to meet that need.

Komok was seen riding on the spit with waves crashing over and almost tipping him over. Teller

Search and Rescue conducted a house-to-house search of old site Teller and also checked around the freshwater lake but did not locate Komok. Teller SAR called off their search at about 9 p.m on November 9, due to weather conditions and water covering the road to old site.

Teller SAR resumed their search at first light on November 10, and managed to get two 4-wheelers to the north end of the Teller spit but the wheelers to the fold that of the feliel's pit but the searchers found no sign of Komok or the 4-wheeler. It was reported the spit was washed out at about the 1/2 way mark headed north.

Teller SAR launched a boat to check Grantley Harbor and several floating boats and debris with no results. On November 10, at about 2:30 p.m. Cellor SAR solled off any further scarching due to Teller SAR called off any further searching due to deteriorating weather and water conditions. If anyone has any further information please contact AST.

On November 10, at about 3:55 a.m., the Gambell police received a telephone call from a female resident of Gambell requesting help at he home. Gambell police subsequently contacted Darrell Apassingok, 30, of Gambell, who was intoxicated and possessed a firearm. Apassingok was arrested for Misconduct Involving Weapons IV. AST investigation further revealed Apassingok pointed the firearm at two people inside the residence. Apassingok was additionally charged with two counts of Assault III. Apassingok was telephonically arraigned due to weather conditions.

How did last week's storm compare?

1974 storm summary

The November 11, 1974 storm took place 37 years ago. 14-year-old John Handeland wrote this very detailed account of the damage from that "epic" storm. Nome has had several "epic" storms in its history. The November 9, 2011 storm was just another big one that Nome has faced in its 112 year existence. By the way, if you do not know the locations John described below, just ask an old timer. Then ask that old timer how they fared during the '74 storm.

Comments and history provided by Director Laura Samuelson of the Carrie M. McLain Memorial Museum.

1974 Storm Summary By 14-year-old John K. Handeland

We really are having a bad disaster here. Yesterday morning around 9 a.m. Caroline Reader and I walked down to East End and then down to B&R. We made it almost all the way down to the Bowling Alley on the sea wall without being stopped. The Police finally caught up with us in back of the City Hall and asked us to leave, but when they left we continued down past the N.C. Apartments on the Sea Wall.

Well, anyway, King Island is completely totaled. The radio stations estimated that there are only about five houses left standing down there at East End. Three barges that were on storage runners down by King Island went right over them and into the village. Two of them are way in the back and one just barely crossed the road. The two tin-covered Standard Oil buildings are not standing. All you can see is a few pieces of tin floating around and then the floor.

Mel Baxter's place (the long skinny one that was in front of Chip Swanson's) was parallel with the road and it is now perpendicular with it and is almost back by Chip's

I don't know if you knew where Ellanna's place was, but all that is left of it is the east and west wall. The waves went right through the south end and knocked out the north end. All that is standing in the house is the stairs going up to the second floor.

About the only buildings left standing, that I can remember, at the end of town are the Sunarit Co-op Building where they do their ivory carving, Karen Baldwin's place, Chip Swanson's place, and I can't think of the others.

Anyway, we walked down the sea wall from the new State Building to the Bowling Alley.

Here is an individual report on each building:

STATE BUILDING — Broken windows on the lower floor and at least a foot and a half of slush, etc. on the floor. People were shoveling it out when we walked by there around 10 a.m. yesterday.

CAVOTA'S STORE — The back part of his basement was ripped out, but nothing else as far as I could tell. RCA ALASCOM — Basement full of water which ruined thousands of dollars worth of communications equipment for the satellite communications dish which was just recently installed. The first night of the storm all communications lines except for one were knocked out and they have been pleading with people to limit calls to no more than three minutes so that other people have a chance to use them in case of emergencies. The salt water ruined the batteries for the dish too and they had to have new batteries along with other equipment shipped in from Anchorage yesterday afternoon.

ALASKA NATIONAL BANK OF THE NORTH, MINER AND MERCHANTS BRANCH —basement where they keep all their permanent records is flooded. The waves broke Floyd Breeden's (the manager) office windows to the south and threw his desk, chair and file cabinets all up against the north wall. All receipts, etc., which were laying out on the first floor were also dampened.

US POST OFFICE/STATE JAIL - Jail had four feet of water in it, but they have pumped most of it out. They evacuated the prisoners up to Carter's Pollyanna Apartments, behind the Lutheran Church, and they were taken by plane to Fairbanks yesterday afternoon sometime. The Post Office had some water in it and they have set up an emergency Post Office in the Multipurpose Room here at the school. They are accepting letters and selling stamps only.

POLAR BAR AND CURIO SHOP - The trailer that was built into the back end of the bar is completely totaled. You could see the furniture still in there. The refrigerator door was open and cheese, etc. was falling out of it. I guess the bar wasn't too badly hurt except for loss of stocks in the basement area of the building. BOARD OF TRADE BAR -Water and waves knocked out the windows and partition at the rear of the building. I guess they were pretty messed up inside to. Rumor has it that Jim West is sitting in the bar with a loaded shotgun to prevent any more looting.

CARRIE M. MCLAIN MEMO-RIAL MUSEUM/LIBRARY- Not damaged as it is well away from the sea. The buildings between the Board of Trade and the Museum/Library were not damaged either.

NORTHERN COMMERCIAL COMPANY - Basement completely flooded, ruining the winter stock. Back of the building is just ragged. There are three or four of the big rocks off the sea wall right up next to the rear of the building. They had their big red delivery truck parked in the back and when they went out this morning it was alongside the building next to the Museum/Library. Frank Couch was saying to someone that he wasn't sure if the N.C. would want to rebuild here. Officials will be coming on the first flight possible to assess the damage today.

ALASKĂ AIRLINES NUGGET INN III - Sea view Room and Gold Dust Lounge walls are completely knocked out. All the furniture is up against the north walls. The big polar bear rug that was hanging on the wall is just one big wet mess. I have heard that people were sitting in the lounge making bets as to when the big plate-glass windows would cave in.

BREAKERS BAR — Back was totally knocked out. The pool table came through the rear partition when a 30 ft. wave (according to Jean Silvernail who was in the bar at the time) hit the building and pushed all of the people in the bar out on the street.

ANCHOR TAVERN — No visible outside damage, though I believe that they had some basement flood-MARUSKIYA'S - Hardly any outside or inside damage. The only thing that they lost was a little shed made out of tin that sat to the rear of the establishment.

YELLOW CAB CAFÉ AND CAB STAND — Nothing noticeable.

NOME CITY HALL — Building structure was weakened considerably. Cars that were sitting behind the City Hall are all smashed together in one heap. The City Hall moved all their records that they could, along with their computer to the Fire Hall. City Hall offices will temporarily be housed in the City Power Plant out by the airport, and the computer will be housed at the Fire Hall.

There were also a number of cars smashed together between the Board of Trade Bar.

NOME LIQUOR STORE -

Ruth belonged to the Alaska Pioneers Igloo #1 in Nome. She and Fred were the first couple to be inducted into the lodge together. After she came to Kodiak, she was instrumental in forming the first women's Pioneer Igloo, Igloo #17, and the men's Pioneer Igloo #18 in Kodiak. She showed her compassion and grit in insisting that the igloo was open for all who qualified, championing equal rights before it was popular to do so. Ruth was very active in the Milliken's, an honorary member of Beta Sigma Phi, an Eastern Star, and a member of the Natalia Shelikof Alaska Chapter of Daughters of the American Revolution (Daniel Boone

A few of her many other accomplishments included standing in front of a bull dozer and making such a ruckus that it kept the Erskine Home (Baranov Museum) from being torn down after the 1964 earthquake and tidal wave. She always supported Little League and youth programs, and helped to make the fairgrounds possible. Her bar was always open on Thanksgiving and Christmas, giving anyone who didn't have family or a place to go a place to hang their hat. Ruth made sure that Brechan Enterprises employed local teens with summer jobs, that is still in place today Ruth led a very fulfilled, colorful and interesting life. She was a true pioneer lady with lots of spirit. Her recently published autobiography, college or trade schools, a tradition

Trails and Tales of a Pioneer, speaks of a life of true pioneer feistiness.

Her last days were blessed with the compassionate care of many dear friends, caregivers, and family. She will be deeply missed. Ruth was preceded in death by her son Walter Nestell and her beloved husband Fred C. Brechan. She leaves behind her daughter Gail St.Pierre (Martin), and the children of Fred. Mike and Jean Brechan. She also leaves many grandchildren, great-grandchildren, and great-great-grandchildren.

had been a long haul for me. While there is no picture of Ruth Brechan, I know she was up there where it wasn't quite as stormy or turbulent, without the roar of the ocean behind her, tending bar just as she was back in 1948 when she built and started the Breakers Bar, and I know Herbie was sitting there right with her telling about when he bought the bar back in early 2000, and how it was back in 1974. I'll bet he was introducing to her all our friends, and I know they had a pretty good crowd...Dave Wayne Wininger, Tom Trainor, Dick Sackett, Eddie Devine, Jim and June West, Valerie and Stan Sobocienski, Albro Gregory, Byron and Jean Silvernail, Stud Duck Jack O'Neal. Eliot Staples, Pete Larsen, Harold Pilcher, Al Doyle, Clayton Baldwin, Bob and Grace Herman, Virginia White, Stan Fricke Sr., Bill Oman, Lonnie O'Connor, Mike Harris, Gilbert Pelewook, Blinky Tommy Leonard, Dennis Warnke, and many more. All have been with us as we weathered storms of earlier years. Well? How did we do, guys? Damn good, I'd say.

We had no stock loss, no damage; we have a very clean basement floor, and many sore backs and shoulders. We are extremely grateful, extremely We couldn't have come through this without many community members sending their prayers, bringing the sweat of their backs, and tools of their trade. The ol' building, she's still standing strong and at the ready for the next big wave. Thank you, Nome! And so to our new friends, dear friends and patrons, from the staff of the Breakers Bar, in sincere appreciation of your help and support, we hoist a glass of good cheer. This one's for you.

If you are a stranger, old timer, gold miner, or just curious and find ourself in town, stop in and see us. We're at the Breakers, on the beach, in Nome.

pop from that warehouse that has blown down. The pop was just sitting out there in the open and the kids were stealing it anyway, so he figured he might as well give it away. Mayor Bob Renshaw stopped him, though, as the kids were not supposed to be on that side of the street and they were also getting into the liquor.

BÉRING SEA SALOON — Just damage to basement supplies.

BOWLING ALLEY/NOME PO-LICE STATION — Back and west wall were partially knocked out. There were a couple of kids in the building playing after the storm with the bowling equipment, which was broken down in the first place. The police station lost a number of records due to water.

B & R TUG & BARGE, INCOR-PORATED - Lost an $80,000 Cat into the jetty. Propane tanks and other equipment were floating around all over the dock area.

CITY POWER PLANT - The power plant was in danger of being flooded at the height of the storm, but due to the efforts of a number of volunteers it was saved. pumped out most of the water and most of the city is back on power now. People were out there sandbagging the plant. A couple of the generators just won't start though and they are having some line problems.

I have been here at the school most of the time and haven't spent too much time at home. I came in at 11 p.m. on Monday evening and didn't leave the building again before Tuesday morning at 12:40. I came back at 1:20, left at 5:40, came back at 6:00, left at 9:00 p.m. Tuesday evening and then came back on Wednesday morning at 8:45, left at 9:00 or so and came back at 10:45 a.m. on Wednesday and haven't left since. It is currently 3:30 a.m. on Thursday.

Here are some statistics on numbers of people we have had through the school the last couple of days:

November 11 — 48 sleepers during the night November 12 — an estimated 350 people came through the building just to warm up, have a cup of coffee, a meal, etc.

November 12 — estimated sleepers on November 12 was 38

November 13 — People coming through the building for coffee etc. wereover 400

We haven't taken a count of how many people are sleeping here tonight.

(This is just junk I am putting down, but since you lived here before and you might be interested in some of

The City Sewage Treatment Plant was out of order for a while today but they finally by-passed it this afternoon sometime, so we can again use the toilets.

The water is contaminated due to the sea water coming into the Snake River, so the City has sent water trucks up to Moonshine Springs to get water and they have delivered one hundred gallons to everyone who was on the truck delivery route. Anyone else had to go to the fire hall to get water.

I was thinking of calling you for a while but when I hear that the emergency rates were $3.50 a minute to Anchorage I said, "Forget it!" They brought the rates up so high so people wouldn't be as apt to make calls and talk for a long time.

There was an emergency City Council meeting in the Board Room area tonight. The City Council met with the Disaster Office people, Red Cross people, etc. The Chief of Police has asked for an ordinance that would put a curfew of everyone from 10p.m. to 6 a.m. to keep them off Front Street. They thought that would give the businesses a chance to board up their buildings. But the City Council didn't feel this was that necessary, so they passed it only for three days. The police had also requested an ordinance that would close the bars for three days to a week, but that was turned down.

Kids have already gone and got into the buildings. The first night of the storm some kids went into the Nugget Inn III and broke open the cigarette machine. If anyone had a sack of cigarettes they could make a fortune around, this school alone. One guy was so desperate (he was drunk also) for a cigarette that he started smoking the butts! Everyone is begging for cigarettes

The only store open is Stop Shop and Save. Oh yes, so is the Merc for 4 hours per day and M'Lord and Lady. Stop Shop must have made a fortune as they were the only grocery store open until the Merc got clearance from the National Guard to reopen. They had to do this, as Front Street was closed and the National Guard was in charge.

Enclosed are copies of some stories that will appear in the Anchorage Daily News. There is this reporter, Howard Weaver, who has set up his headquarters in our office here, and he wrote these.

I haven't been at school once this week. On Monday morning this storm was brewing and the roads out to Nome-Beltz were so slippery that one bus slid off the road. Fortunately, he had already dumped off all the kids at the school. With one bus off the road, one that wouldn't start, there was just Barrow's bus. The bus I catch is the last one and Barrow came back and said that he just wasn't going to risk taking another load out, so I stayed here at the school and worked. There were about 25 or 30 other kids that didn't get to school. Sure glad I missed the bus, as I don't miss school that much and I would have missed out on the beginning of the disaster.

It is now 4 a.m. and only two more hours until I have to wake up a couple of people. Byron Silvernail and that reporter from the Anchorage Daily News want to get up around 6:00 or 6:30. Byron has to go over to the fire hall and start working on the power lines again. He hasn't got too much sleep the last couple of days. He just has been too busy working to have any time to sleep. The reporter wants to go out and get some pictures, I guess.

Well, this will have to wrap up this letter. I am about to go to sleep here at the typewriter, so I had better go get a cup of coffee and work on some other things.

Will write again when more details are available and we know exactly what is happening.

-John Handeland

Feds may chop back energy assistance

By Sandra L. Medearis

The Nome Common Council unanimously passed a resolution urging the Alaska delegation to fight to maintain the low - income home energy assistance program at current levels. The measure, passed Nov. 16, is a companion to an almost identical resolution passed by Nome Joint Utility System board of directors on Oct. 18. The federal government has proposed to cut the program by 50 percent.

Last year 77 Nome households qualified for $166,705 in assistance with another 757 households in the region receiving help through the program. As Nome families face the most expensive winter in area history, with heating fuel running close to $6 per gallon or more, the federal government has proposed to cut the LIHEAP funding in half, following already drastic cuts between 2011 and 2010 levels, nationwide from $5.1 billion in 2010 to $4.7 billion in 2011.

Applications have been mailed to previous recipients of assistance within priority populations—elderly, disabled, families with children under six years old, and households with income below 125 percent of the federal poverty income guidelines. Applications became available for the general public after Oct. 1.

Figures provided the Council showed heavy reliance on the program to heat and light households in surrounding villages where cash is scarce: Diomede, 20 households, Gambell and Savoonga, over 100 households in each village, Shishmaref, 96 homes, Stebbins, 76, as examples.

The cost of fuel in Nome has risen by 20 percent in the last year. At the same time, Nome Joint Utility raised electricity rates by about 4 percent to meet the increased cost of feeding the utility's diesel generation. According to the resolution, in connection with

NovaGold has new CEO van Nieuwenhuyse to head new subsidiary

By Diana Haecker

NovaGold Resources Inc., the Canadian company that owns the failed Rock Creek gold mine in Nome, is undergoing major changes in its upper level management and corporate structure. The company last week announced that former Barrick Gold President Gregory Lang is going to head up NovaGold as president and CEO effective January 2012.

Lang headed Barrick's North America operations with projects in the US – including the Barrick Gold/NovaGold joint venture Donlin Creek– Canada and Dominican Republic. Lang was with Barrick for ten years; prior to that, he worked at Homestake Mining Company and International Corona Corporation – both now part of Barrick Gold.

On the Web:

www.nomenugget.net E-mail:

nugget@nomenugget.com

Whether or not this is the first step of Barrick Gold to absorb NovaGold as well remains to be seen.

Barrick Gold attempted a hostile takeover of NovaGold in 2006 and offered NG shareholders $16 per share. The takeover attempt was not successful back then. NG shares took a dive ever since and are traded for $10.21 at the NY stock exchange as of press time on Monday.

as of press time on Monday.

Current NG CEO and president
Rick van Nieuwenhuyse is to step down and become the president and CEO of a newly formed subsidiary called NovaCopper, which owns 100 percent interest in the Ambler project. In October, NovaCopper signed an agreement with NANA Corporation to consolidate a 445,000-acre property with a rich copper-zinclead-gold-silver deposit in the Ambler mining district.

Van Nieuwenhuyse will continue to sit on the board of directors of NovaGold.

The company proposes to distribute shares of NovaCopper to NovaGold shareholders as a return of capital. A plan associated with the changes will have to be approved by courts and shareholders in a special meeting scheduled for January.

meeting scheduled for January.

NovaGold also announced that the board decided to sell all or part of their 50 percent share of the Galore Creek project in British Colum-

The Galore Creek project made news when NG shareholders brought a class action lawsuit against the company. The lawsuits alleged that NovaGold misrepresented that the Galore Creek project was economically feasible when it knew or should have known it would cost substantially more than the figure that was presented, $1.8 billion. NovaGold and its partner Teck Resources Ltd. announced in November 2007 that they were halting construction at Galore Creek after cost estimates ballooned to $5 billion. The lawsuit was settled for $28 million.

The board of directors also sees changes. Dr. Thomas Kaplan is a new member of the NG board of directors and has been appointed chairman of the board. Kaplan is the CEO of The Electrum Group, a privately held global natural resources investor. An affiliate of Electrum holds 21.65 percent of NovaGold's outstanding shares.

Gil Leathley has also been appointed to the board. He is senior vice president and chief operating officer of NovaGold. He has been with the company since January 2010. According to NovaGold's press release, Leathley has worked in a variety of mining operations and retired in 2000 as senior vice president and COO of Homestake Mining Company, which now belongs to Barrick. Gerry McConnell, the outgoing chairman of the board of directors will continue to serve as a director. NovaGold now focuses on the development of a gold mine at Donlin Creek, which is a 50-50 joint venture between NG and Barrick Gold.

Letters -

Dear Editor,

In their November 17, 2011 column in the Nugget, Dan Harrelson and Don Stiles said the following statement in my letter to the editor is a lie. Well, I should say I think it was my letter to the editor because they were too cowardly to reveal who they were defaming. I'm assuming it was me:

"According to the 2009 NSEDC annual report that was delivered to everybody's mailbox; during its first year and a half, Siu booked net operating losses of $4,220,795." 11/3/11 Nome Nugget

The truth is on page 22 of the NSEDC 2009 annual report, "As of December 31, 2009, Siu Corporation has remaining NOLs of approximately $4,220,795". This report is online at: http://www.nsedc.com/annualreports.html

Dan and Don said, "Siu Alaska booked a net profit in 2009 of $2.7 million.

The truth is that the 2009 NSEDC annual report says nothing about Siu booking a $2.7 million net profit. I don't have any way to tell if either number is true, but the $7 million discrepancy looks bad.

We should be able to find the truth in NSEDC's 2009 audited financial statement, but NSEDC doesn't let community members see its audits; they hide the truth about what they are doing with our money, and that's Dan and Don said Siu won't lose money investing in the shoreside pollock fleet.

The National Marine Fisheries Service says catcher vessels, like the ones Siu bought for an undisclosed amount rumored to be $52 million, could lose more than 90 percent of their pollock B season revenues under proposed regulations limiting chum salmon bycatch. Maybe NMFS is lying too, but it appears that in order for NSEDC to keep the profits flowing from its shore-based trawlers, it will have to oppose chum salmon bycatch limitations.

Dan and Don said Siu invested in shoreside trawlers, so they will be able to reduce that sector's impact on salmon returning to our communities and that Siu's vessels magically fish cleaner than the rest of the fleet.

The truth is that during 2009, seven of Siu's trawlers were on the dirty 20 list for king salmon bycatch. Five of our vessels made it on the dirty 20 list for chum bycatch.

Dan and Don said NSEDC board members receive audited financial statements for both NSEDC and Siu. When the subject came up earlier this month, board members said they hadn't received a 2010 audited financial statement, but they could be lying.

Even if they were telling the truth, NSEDC board members have been told by the staff they aren't supposed to share audit information with their constituents, so how are the owners of the program supposed to find out what NSEDC is doing with our money?

The Nome Nugget and the City of Nome have requested audited financial statements from NSEDC, but these requests have gone unanswered. That's the truth.

Dan and Don said pollock trawl bycatch isn't destroying Norton

Control Freaks

Why are some government employees afraid to tell the public what's happening? Does their boss beat them with a stick? After the recent Bering Sea storm The Nugget checked for local input about the storm damage. The phone company was contacted about the 911 emergency system going down. The Anchorage spokesperson said the phones did not go down. Sure they didn't. Then there is the Nome Police dispatcher who can't reveal the local emergency command phone number. The Department of Transportation has to refer all storm damage questions to someone clueless in Fairbanks.

It's too bad Nome has to surrender its local responses. Sometimes one has to forego the frustrations and just unload. Government isn't the only information control freak. Try to make a phone call to the local credit union or cable company. We have to call Anchorage, listen to a phone tree and leave a voice mail message and don't hold yer breath for a return call. Trying to do business locally can be even more of a challenge than getting information from the government.

Control of information to the public is not giving away trade secrets or classified spy stuff. We live in a democracy that is in jeopardy. We should be concerned that we don't end up like those Communist countries or those autocratic nations whose tyrants thrive on ignorance. We need to do all we can to promote the free exchange of information. We need to rid ourselves of the control freaks in government. - N.L.M.-

Prehistoric artifact found at Cape Espenberg

A team of researchers with the University of Colorado, Boulder's Institute of Arctic and Alpine Research has discovered the first prehistoric bronze artifact made from a cast ever found in Alaska.

The small, buckle-like object was found in an ancient Eskimo dwelling and likely originated in East Asia. The artifact consists of a rectangular bar connected to a broken circular ring, said Hoffecker. It was found in August by a team excavating a 1,000-year-old house dug into the side of a beach ridge by early Inupiat Eskimos on the Seward Peninsula. within the Bering Land Bridge National Preserve.

Both sections of the artifact are beveled on one side and concave on the other, indicating it was manufactured in a mold, said Hoffecker, "I was totally astonished," said Hoffecker. "The object appears to be older than the house we were excavating by at least a few hundred years.

Hoffecker said the bronze object may have been used as part of a harness or horse ornament prior to its arrival in Alaska. Its function on both continents still remains a puz-

reflects long-distance trade from production centers in either Korea, China, Manchuria or southern Siberia, according to Mason.

It conceivably could have been traded from the steppe region of southern Siberia, said Hoffecker, where people began casting bronze several thousand years ago.

Alternatively, some of the earliest Inupiat Eskimos in northwest Alaska the direct ancestors of modern Eskimos thought to have migrated into Alaska from adjacent Siberia some 1,500 years ago —might have brought the object with them from the other side of the Bering Strait. The peninsula was part of the Bering Land Bridge linking Asia and North America during the last ice age when sea level dropped dramatically, and may have been used by early peoples as a corridor to migrate from Asia into the New World some 14,000 years ago.

The artifact was discovered in August by University of California, Davis, doctoral student Jeremy Foin under 3 feet of sediment near an entryway to a house at Cape Espen-Other project members included Chris Darwent of UC Davis, Claire Alix of the University of Paris, Nancy Bigelow of the University of Alaska Fairbanks, Max Friesen of the University of Toronto and Gina Hernandez of the National Park Service.

"The shape of the object immediately caught my eye," said Foin, who spotted the soil-covered artifact in an archaeological sifting screen. "After I saw that it clearly had been cast in a mold, my first thought was disbelief, quickly followed by the realization that I had found something of potentially great significance.'

The excavations are part of a National Science Foundation-funded project designed to study human response to climate change at Cape Espenberg from A.D. 800 to A.D. 1400, a critical period of cultural change in the western Arctic, said Mason. "That particular time period is thought by some to be an analog of what is happening to our environment now as Earth's temperatures are rising," said Mason. He said, "One of our goals is to find out how these people adapted to a changing climate through their subsistence activities.

The Cape Espenberg site has vielded a treasure trove of several thousand artifacts. The bronze artifact unearthed in August is currently under study by prehistoric metallurgical expert and Purdue University Assistant Professor H. Kory Cooper.

PREHISTORIC - A cast bronze artifact, about 2 inches by 1 inch and less than an inch thick, is the first to be found in Alaska. A National Science Foundation-funded excavation led by CU-Boulder to look at human response to climate change on the Seward Peninsula in Alaska some 1,000 years ago found the artifact inside an ancient house dug into the side of a sand-covered beach ridge once occupied by Inupiat Eskimos. The object is the first prehistoric bronze artifact made from a cast ever found in Alaska and appears to have originated in East Asia.

Fuel barge late in coming over the horizon

A Delta Western barge headed to Nome and laden with over a million gallons of diesel oil has been delayed in Adak by mechanical issues along with weather.

The barge, if it comes soon, could still unload its cargo across Port of Nome fuel facilities, say port users. The barge would be using the outer harbor and not the ice-clogged inner harbor.

The fuel is headed for Sitnasuak Native Corp. storage tanks. Should the barge not arrive, Nome Joint Utility System would not have any fuel for sale, according to John K. Handeland, manager.

'We did not buy any extra this year," he said, "because of the higher price and the supply of cheaper fuel we still had in inventory to average in with the new fuel to keep rates as low as possible."

Delta Western did not immediately return a phone call Monday.

• Feds may cut energy assistance

the U.S. Department of Agriculture's Extremely High Energy Cost Community Grant Program, Nome's cost of energy has been consistently documented at 275 percent of the national average.

The Council's resolution asks Sen. Lisa Murkowski, Sen. Mark Begich and Congressman Don Young to fight to maintain and increase funding at no less than FY 2011 levels plus adjustments for this winter's increased energy costs.

Councilman Randy Pomeranz urged, backed by Councilwoman Mary Knodel, that the City spend money to hire a consultant to evaluate the feasibility of developing local energy sources from gas, hydroelectric, coal or hot springs. The City has available $1 million received from Norton Sound Economic Development Corp. a couple years ago for energy development. Knodel suggested the City hire not a single consultant, but a company without a financial interest in the outcome to apply highly qualified experts to the issue.

Goodbye, Lulu

In other business, the Councilwith the exception of Councilman Stan Andersen—approved awarding the job to take the barge Lulu out of the harbor to Q Trucking Co. The City opened five bids on the job on Oct. 21: Global Diving and Salvage, Inc., $2,661,000; Heko Service, $2,244,960; Pacific Pile and Marine, LP, $1,850,000; Prowest Contractors, $1,410,000; and Q Trucking Co., $404,756.82. The Port Commission at its Nov. 10 meeting recommended that the Council award the bid to Q Trucking. Andersen said the $400,000 would be better spent for port improvements at this time.

The City bought the Lulu in 1986 as a transfer barge for its new causeway, but a 1990 storm damaged the Lulu and partially submerged her near the causeway. Then the City hired Crowley Maritime to salvage the barge to be moved into the inner harbor as a moorage, but the Lulu went aground on the sandspit east of the causeway where it has been visible more or less, depending on the tide level, for years.

The Nome Common Council finished tweaking and wrapping up five sections of the City's 2011 spending plan at its Nov. 16 meeting. The changes altered the budget adopted in June 2010. The panel recessed for public testimony but no one took the podium.

Overall, general fund budget results allocated revenue increases to sales tax, landfill maintenance fees (use by school roof instruction and other projects, building permits, raw fish tax sharing, ambulance fees and pool rentals.

General fund expense increases occurred in the headings of legislative, animal control, ambulance, building maintenance (new public safety building and other facilities), landfill, park and playground lights, road maintenance, museum and library. There were decreases in spending for administration, clerk, police, fire, pool and Visitor Center.

The Council unanimously adopted the FY 2011budget revisions rendering these final figures for 2011; General fund, $11,360,411; school bond funds, $2,291403; special revenue fund, $496,314; capital projects fund, $2,718,604; Port of Nome, $1,273,103.

The Council inspected police reports that stated there had been no calls for assistance to Milano Pizzeria or the VFW bar and therefore did not raise issues concerning the renewal of liquor licenses for the two establishments. A local governing body has 60 days in which to protest and block renewal of a liquor license, but must be prepared to document and defend such a protest.

During citizen comments at the end of the meeting, Cussy Kauer urged the City to adopt a permitting process with standards for erecting wind turbines.

"I am terrified of blades flying off in public," she said. She was "shocked" that Alaska Airlines had a wind turbine at the terminal.

"What happens if a blade flies off into a jet? I see a real danger out there with windmills popping up in public places," Kauer said.

If final comments, Andersen said he wanted to see a printout of expenses for a trip to Norway concerning former Councilmember Jim West, Jr. and Mayor Denise Michels.

Ulu News

By Senator Donald Olson
District T.
Coastal communities braved record-breaking Bering Sea storm

Last week, several communities in my district endured the record-breaking, hurricane-like Bering Sea storm. I'd like to commend those local communities for their emergency preparedness for this intensely severe storm. I'd also like to express my gratitude to the State of Alaska Emergency Operations Center and the many local, state, and federal agencies for their collaborative partnership in carrying out the state's emergency response plans during this historic storm.

The powerful storm packed a double-punch of 90 mph winds in some areas and flooding in others. According to the Anchorage Daily News, the storm caused damage in 37 communities. Regrettably, a 26-year-old man from the village of Teller remains missing. A search is ongoing and searchers say he was possibly swept into the Bering Sea.

Aside from the damage and loss, I'm pleased to learn that coastal residents are safe in their communities or evacuation points. That is thanks to the numerous organizations that worked together to save lives as well as minimize damage from the mega storm. Now many of those organizations are focused on assessing the destruction and starting the difficult process of rebuilding.

In the most recent update from the Alaska Department of Military and Veterans Affairs and the Division of Homeland Security and Emergency Management, three Preliminary Damage Assessment teams operating out of Nome, Bethel, and Kotzebue have been deployed. More teams (including FEMA) will deploy to the hubs soon with plans to visit communities following that. Next, a data collection group, whose mission is to receive the damage assessment numbers from each of the branch directors, will compile the overall incident assessments and reconcile with their FEMA counterparts at the Emergency Operations Center.

The Red Cross is also working diligently to help victims affected by the storm. Volunteers and staff are coordinating with the State Emergency Command Center to assess the status of affected coastline communities and to ensure their most immediate needs are being met.

This epic storm is a great example of why our communities should continue developing emergency plans in preparation for such natural disasters. I've heard from constituents in Kotzebue and Shishmaref that these communities fared much better because of the shore walls that were implemented to prevent damage from storms like this. A Disaster Policy Cabinet meeting is scheduled to take place on November 30 to address this incident as well as the Kenai Peninsula Borough storm and power outage from a couple weeks ago.

I'd like to restate that our local community leaders did an outstanding job preparing for the storm and making sure the lives of neighbors and loved ones were protected in the best way possible. I'd also like to acknowledge the Alaska National Guard members who are stationed in Nome and Bethel. They worked closely with U.S. Coast Guard counterparts to provide immediate evacuation capabilities if life safety issues were to arise.

In the spirit of Thanksgiving, I'm very thankful for the safety of those in our communities and for the help of all those who helped prepare for the storm and assisted in the aftermath. Your service and help are immeasurable and very much appreciated, especially by those who reside in affected communities.

Norton Sound names new president and CEO

The full board of Norton Sound Health Corporation met on November 14 and decided to offer the job of president and CEO to Deven Parlikar. Parlikar started on November 15. He is in the process of moving from San Diego, California, to Nome. Parlikar has a bachelor's degree in economics from San Diego State University and an MBA from the University of California, Irvine.

Before moving to Nome, Parlikar was the principal consultant with M3D, a management consulting firm. Parlikar's health-related work experience includes being the president and executive director of the Native American Indian Health Council of San Diego, being on the Indian Health Council and having been appointed to the UN Council on Human Rights. In 2005, the US Department of Health and Human Services presented Parlikar with the CEO of the year award for managerial excellence and using public private partnerships in healthcare.

Parlikar's other professional experience includes working with and directing program management of public health programs funded by the Public Health Foundation Enterprises in Eastern Europe, South Africa and South Asia.

He currently serves on the boards of directors of the National Organization on Fetal Alcohol Syndrome, the Asia Pacific Tobacco Prevention Initiative and the California Primary Health Care Association.

In a press release, Parlikar said that he is delighted to lead Norton Sound to the next level of excellence. "There are some exciting developments in the horizon such as the new hospital construction project; a new long term care facility and such that shows the commitment and dedication of NSHC's staff, board and the communities it serves. To be part of this committed team is a dream come true for me," Parlikar said.

Sound salmon returns, but they don't say how they know that this is true. The information on salmon bycatch isn't as clear-cut as Dan and Don wish it was. All the scientific data really show is that an unknown number of salmon bound for specific western Alaska rivers including the rivers in Norton Sound are killed and wasted. That's unfortunate, but it's the truth.

The truth is that trawl bycatch is a mixed stock fishery and it is easy to overharvest weak stocks like the ones in Norton Sound in mixed stock fisheries.

Dan and Don said that NSEDC and Siu don't hide information from

The truth is that NSEDC conducts most of its business in executive session. Members of the public and even NSEDC directors are excluded from Siu meetings and can't see Siu financial records. The minutes of the 2011 Siu annual meeting contain the following - An NSEDC board member questioned why NSEDC board members cannot attend the Siu Alaska Corporation Board Meeting. John Eckels stated this was the decision of the Siu Alaska Corporation Board. Don Stiles noted this was to protect NSEDC from any liability, keeping that distance acts as a corporate veil. He asked Kyan to elaborate. Kyan Olanna noted that arm's length provisions are for the protection of NSEDC. William asked how we, NSEDC, as the lone shareholder are able to elect people to the Siu Board, but are prevented, as a shareholder, to attend the meeting. Kyan explained that the NSEDC board as a whole represents NSEDC, which is the shareholder; but that individual board members cannot act as a shareholder.

It is a truism that people who hide behind closed doors generally have something to hide and when they can't come up with an excuse for their secrecy, you have to wonder what they are hiding. When millions of dollars of public money are being moved around, there needs to be transparency; that's just common

I'm concerned about the massive amount of debt NSEDC and Siu have taken on. In 2008, before the Alaska Boat Company purchase and the purchase of the Bering Fisheries plant in Dutch Harbor, Siu subsidiary Glacier Fish Company had close to $200 million in debt. The truth is that wasn't reported in the NSEDC 2008 annual report.

We don't know how NSEDC borrowed to buy into Dutch Harbor and they're planning to borrow another $40 million. NSEDC has no business taking on these debts without the informed consent of the people who will be left holding the bag if their risky gambles fail. The truth is that they don't tell us anything about what they are doing with our money.

Dan and Don's bottom line says, 'NSEDC and Siu also operate in the highly competitive, for-profit world of commercial fishing. This requires that some information remain privileged, often in order to protect the interests of our partner companies.'

As an IRS 501(c)(4) tax exempt organization, NSEDC is subsidized by the taxpayers to do the things that for-profit corporations wouldn't do to address poverty, unemployment and lack of economic opportunity in Norton Sound communities. That's in the tax code.

The tax code also says that 501(c)(4) corporations must not be organized for profit and must be operated exclusively to promote social welfare. NSEDC's for profit competitive commercial fishing operations threaten its tax exempt status. We could end up paying 35% of the CDQ royalties to the government just so Dan and Don can dabble in Bering Sea commercial fishing alongside the big boys.

I don't believe that any of the people in NSEDC or Siu corporation management have the expertise required to compete in that industry and even if they don't lose all of our money, I want to know how it will create jobs or develop the economy of Norton Sound. I could call the NSEDC office in Anchorage, walk into the local office in Nome or ask one of the outreach liaisons, but they won't talk to me and I am not the only one they won't talk to about these issues. If you don't think that's true, try asking them and let us know what they say.

NSEDC has moved most of our business assets into Siu and tens of millions of dollars of our cash. Siu now has a tangled web of at least 28 subsidiaries and partnerships. I tried to sort it out but every time I thought I had come to the end, there were more owners hidden inside another LLC or holding company. There is no way to find out the truth about who owns our fishing businesses, and that should worry everyone in Norton Sound.

Congress recently directed the Government Accountability Office to investigate how well the ANCSA corporations communicate with their shareholders and the need for more oversight. I urge anyone who thinks the CDQ groups need more accountability and oversight to send their concerns to the GAO email box at the address below and ask them to expand their investigation to include the CDQ program. The GAO is very good at getting at the truth, and the truth will show that congressional action is needed to fix the CDQ program. ANCfeedback@GAO.gov Tim Smith Nome, AK

Re: Alaska Marine Highway, and the future of our Ferry System (DOT, yearly "Scoping Plan" report, WRGL Sentinel 10/27/11)

I didn't know that DOT had a yearling "Scoping Plan." I have lived in Alaska since 1963, when our ferries first started. I was here, when they enlarged our fleet so as to get our ferry service to our Indian villages, and our logging camps, so that

I worked for the ferry system for many years, and I watched as DOT did less and less maintenance on our ships. Every winter as our ships got ready to go into "dry-dock," our "A" and "B," crew engineers on each ship would turn in their "rap" sheets to DOT, stating the maintenance needed for each ship. The "Rap" sheet was a long yellow sheet of necessary repairs for each ship, compiled by the engineers on each ship. t consisted of a full sheet of repairs and every winter for many years DOT crossed out the full sheet of repairs, except for about the last four or five repairs, saying they were not

I worked on the Matanuska, when she backed into the dock in Bellingham. We had a new skipper that trip and he was not aware that you had to "jiggle" the reverse to get it out of reverse. A crane fell onto our ship, crushing several cars, and a woman had her legs crushed. Since then no one is allowed below decks until the ship is secured at the dock. There were many other incidents through the years, not because of our captain's qualifications, but more because our "maintenance" had not been done on any of our ships for years. # Haugen pleads not guilty

Former Northwest Campus director Linda Haugen pleaded not guilty to charges of misconduct involving a controlled substance during her arraignment on Nov. 15.

Haugen stands accused of sending 55 grams of marijuana and marijuana pills to her P.O Box in Nome from Colorado, in October. Shortly after a criminal complaint was filed with the court, Haugen resigned Haugen's Anchorage attorney asked whether Haugen could telephonically participate at the next court hearing on Dec. 15, as she was currently relocating. Magistrate Brad Gater granted the request.

Haugen was released on her own recognizance, which means that the court permits her to stay out of jail pending the resolution of the case and that there is no need to post bail.

Nome man charged with sexual abuse of a minor to change plea

By Diana Haecker

Vaughn Johnson, a 57-year-old Nome man charged with one count of sexual abuse of a minor in the first degree, has put the court on notice that he may enter a guilty plea. In a hearing last week. Johnson entered a waiver of indictment and the court scheduled a change of plea hearing for January 4. A waiver of indictment means that Johnson gives up the right to have his case heard in front of a grand jury. If a grand jury returns a true bill, an indictment is filed as the charging document in court and the case can go to trial. The State's District Attorney John Earthman explained that child sexual cases, often don't advance to grand jury or to trial in order to avoid having children go through the trauma again by testifying.

Johnson is accused of sexually assaulting a nine-year-old girl. Charges were filed on September 6. Johnson is held at the Anvil Mountain Correctional Facility with bail set at $50,000.

School board mulls tobacco policies in first readings

By Diana Haecker

The school board in its regular meeting held last week, went through first readings of two board policies that aim to make NPS schools a tobacco-free environment and to develop a tobacco prevention and support program.

Nome Public Schools administrators worked with Danielle Sylvester, K-12 tobacco prevention coordinator, who presented drafts of comprehensive tobacco policies at the meeting. Sylvester said that after researching similar tobacco policies of other schools, she modeled the drafts to mirror the strong policies NPS has in place against alcohol and drug abuse.

Sylvester said that the grant she is working under includes the marching orders to work with schools to bring tobacco prevention to students and also aid the school district formulating a tobacco-free policy. The grant is a rural tobacco prevention grant issued from the State of Alaska Department of Health and Social Services. Director of federal programs, instruction and accountability, John Berkeley, explained that the grant is designed to assist communities and schools in developing poliprograms works at the schools as a youth advocate and is available to help students to kick their tobacco addiction, upon referral by the principals.

The school board discussed the language of both draft policies and Barb Nickels questioned why only one policy spells out the consequences for student violators. Sylvester and John Berkeley stressed the point that the policies are designed to be non-punitive. However, in order to bring the police in line with other policies, i.e. the drug and alcohol policy, the board agreed on an amendment that includes language to the effect that students who violate the policy shall be subject to disciplinary action that could lead to suspension.

The policies will go into second reading during the next regular school board meeting. The school board also adopted board policies dealing with equipment use, children of military families, withholding grades, diploma or transcripts and portable electronic devices, including cell phones.

Other items of discussion:

Superintendent Mike Brawner told the board that a new state law is in place regarding students suffering a reading deficit that hasn't been diagnosed, limited home support and experiencing physical or emotional abuse. "This is a call to action," Brawner commented

In order to get up to the goal of having 90 percent of students read at grade level, Keller suggested the continuation of after-school tutoring in collaboration with Nome Eskimo Community for grades kindergarten through third grade. When asked why grades 4 through sixth are left out, he said that there are only very limited resources available. He said that Mrs. Wehde works with fifth and sixth graders on reading skills.

Parent/Teacher conferences: High school had a successful parentteacher conference as 60 percent, or 140, parents of senior and junior high school students showed up to confer with the teacher. Gast attributed the high turnout to Janeen Sullivan who made a special effort to contact parents of struggling students and encourage parent-teacher conference participation. At the Nome Elementary School, 85 percent of parents showed up to confer with their child's teacher. Keller also encouraged that children be present during those parent/teacher conferences and said that he sat in on one Big Brothers/Big Sisters: Dr. Keller announced the demise of the Big Brothers/Big Sisters program in Nome. He said that he hopes that the program will see some more funding and that it would make a comeback.

Collaboration: Teachers spent last Wednesday afternoon in collaboration meetings. The collaboration, Mike Brawner explained, is a new effort to look at data and plan future instruction. Nome-Beltz Principal Steve Gast said the teachers were given data from recent testing and a specific set of questions. For Nome-Beltz teachers, the questions were how to identify strengths and weaknesses of students, how to help pupils who are struggling, as well as how to encourage those who excel in their academics. "This is our first shot at collaboration," Gast said. "We are excited to give teachers a specific task and to hear what they come up with."

NES Principal Dave Keller added that this collaboration day was to create a focused event for teachers. "We planned this collaboration carefully

Gast commended the district for making excellent decisions when they called for an early release on Nov. 8. Brawner said that students will have to make up for part of the day, but it was not a hard decision to make. "When you weigh safety or time, then safety of our students is more important," Brawner said.

Awards assembly: Gast said that during a recent awards assembly, 102 Nome-Beltz students were honored for perfect attendance, honor roll and student-of-the-month honors. At the Nome Elementary School, Keller said that 98 students received perfect attendance certificates for the first quarter of the school year, which is up from last year's number of 73 students for first quarter.

This is the first time that NPS set into policy that the schools are a tobacco-free environment and coupled the hard-line approach of zero tolerance with a cessation and prevention program.

The policy on tobacco-free schools prohibits the use or distribution by students, parents, all district employees, contractors and all other visitors on all school district property, at school sponsored events and in school owned vehicles.

Student violators would be subject to disciplinary actions, district employees who violate the policy could face sanctions up to termination of their employment, and visitors would be asked to leave and local law enforcement could be noti-

The second policy is designed to develop a comprehensive prevention and support program. Sylvester worded the draft so it has a non-punitive tone to it and encourages students with tobacco problems to seek help. The draft says that "the district shall provide preventative instruction that helps students obtain and use current and accurate information regarding tobacco, develop and maintain a positive self-concept, take positive actions to cope with stress, and use appropriate social and personal skills to resist involvement with tobacco."

The policy also spells out that school personnel be trained in identifying symptoms of tobacco use and that students as well as parents should also be informed about appropriate counseling. Sylvester from a concussion sustained during school. The district has aligned administrative regulations dealing with concussions and has implemented the change before the new school year began. Steve Gast, principal at Nome-Beltz Sr./Jr. High School said that his staff hit the ground running as all high school coaches have gone through the information on the new concussion regulations.

Reading results: Nome Elementary School principal Dave Keller broke the not-so-good news that recent MAP reading tests results showed that NES students have a long way to go to achieve the goal of 90 percent in reading. "We are not there," Keller said. "We are at 40 percent." He said that the district norm is students reading at fourth grade level, while the national norm is sixth grade level. Superintendent Mike Brawner in his report presented pie charts showing reading results for students in grades 5 through 8. The majority of fifth graders- 16 out of 40 - are reading at second grade level. Twelve are reading at third grade level and only three students are reading at grade level. Of the 40 tested students in sixth grade, six are reading above grade level, four are at grade level and the majority of nine students are reading at fifth grade level. Out of 38 students in seventh grade, seven students are reading at second grade level. Brawner also added information on the correlation between poor reading performance and drop out characteristics for sixth graders. Some of the characteristics that can lead a sixth grader to quit school include being older than the current grade level, poor attendance, WRESTLING - Karlee Katchatag of Unalakleet wrestles her cousin, Henry Katchatag of Shaktoolik at the Junior High Wrestling and Cheerleading Invitational in Unalakleet.

By Stephen Palmatier

Last week, the 30th annual Bering Strait School District Elementary and Junior High Wrestling and Cheerleading Invitational took place in Unalakleet where teams from all different surrounding villages flocked to be a part of the tournament. The children, no older than their early teens, made everyone feel as if they were adults with both mental and physical toughness.

In what was a two-day tournament taking up a combined 20 hours of wrestling and cheerleading, children at a young age all around put their bodies on the line in order to try to claim their weight championship and cheer on their local teams. With both elementary and junior high divisions, there were a combined 18 weight classes between the two to earn weight titles.

What was fascinating to watch was the different styles of wrestling with the different weight classes. With the smallest weight class being the elementary 65 pounds, they were faster, tougher to grasp on with their small bodies, while the junior high unlimited weight class was a rough and tough, hold on to each other power fight in which speed played no part whatsoever.

The big winners of the tournament were Savoonga with four championships and even more so, St. Lawrence Island with Gambell having another four titles as well. It was incredible to see villages from an isolated island be as dominant as they were against everyone else.

As for the individual achievements of the classes, the first winner was Caleb Smith of Savoonga winning the Elementary 65 pound weight class. And here's a list of the rest of the winners:

Elementary 70- Joey Tocktoo-Koyuk Elementary 75- Joshua Smith- Savoonga Elementary 78- Josh Prentice- White Mountain Elementary 85- Shannon Apassingok-Gambell Elementary 88- Leonard Apangalook-Gambell Elementary 93- Nathan Saccheus- Elim Elementary 98- Oswald Moses- Golovin Elementary 108- Jonathan Avalnun- Gambell Elementary 125- Elijah Kulowiyi- Savoonga Elementary Unlimited- Alaze Waghiyi- Savoonga Junior High 89- Jeffrey Slwooko- Gambell Junior High 99- Jerome Takak- Elim Junior High 109- Ben Otton- Koyuk

Junior High Unlimited- Alfred Olanna- Shismaref Regardless of the champions of each class, what really stood out was the atmosphere of the tournament and every athlete in particular. The Unalakleet gym, which was packed for both days during the tournament, was loud as each village cheered on their athlete along with that team's cheerleaders cheering on their fellow villager. It was an amazing thing for myself to witness the effort that these children put forth at such a young age when we do not think of someone as an athlete yet. This tournament demonstrated the way athletics should be treated by everyone —with heart and will.

A great example of this heart and will came from a girl from St. Michael in the tournament. In what was a tournament that had nearly a dozen female wrestlers, one girl from St. Michael actually broke her collarbone in the semifinal match of her weight class. Throughout the tournament she seemed like one of the better wrestlers out there. However, because of her injury, she had to quit her match and then was not in the final.

Later, during the awards ceremony, they actually announced her as the Junior High Most Outstanding wrestler as she came out with a brace around her shoulder and arm to accept the trophy. It was a great touch and simply put, was a defining image of what that tournament meant to so many of the athletes.

Swimmers testing the waters for "Meeting of the Sun"

By Diana Haecker

A strange procession of four men clad in nothing more than flipflops and bathing suits, carrying the flags of Alaska, China, Russia and England walked from the Nome Visitor Center, down the seawall to the beach. They ran a short lap along the beach, chanting words to the effect of peace, friendship and cooperation between countries. Then, just before the sun rose out of the almost frozen Bering Sea, Nome Rotarian Loren Prosser took a deep breath and led Alexander Brylin (Russia), Xhang Ling Xhe (China) and Jack Bright (UK) into the chilly waters for a quick swim. They walked about 50 yards out to sea, and while the swimmers took a dip and paddled around for about five minutes in 0.5°C (32.9°F) water, Prosser exited the water and quickly got into warm

The exercise of the swimmers was in preparation of the first intercontinental swimming relay from Russia to Alaska. The three swimmers from China, Russia and England braved the cold Norton Sound to literally test the waters. The plan is that about 30 participants swim in a relay across the Bering Strait sometime in July or August 2012. The event is titled "Meeting of the Sun" and the project is to further research on the effects of hypothermia on the human body during a day and night swim in the Bering Strait, as well as to strengthen Russian-American ties and friendships between athletes from different countries.

The swim will start at Cape Dezhnev and will take the relay via Big and Little Diomede to Wales, over a distance of 53 miles.

and other officers. The excuse was that "AMHS" couldn't afford the repairs, and now look at all the ships DOT has bought and are not in service and all the docks they have had built in various places; that have not been in use for years.

Also, when the first fast ferry designs were being shown in Juneau, a new officer was being shown the new route she was to use and was told that DOT would be skipping some ports. When the officer asked how these people would be able to get off their islands, someone replied "who cares." I was "deadheading" and riding up on the bridge, and he told the other officers that he didn't want to work for this system.

When the fast ferry, Fairweather was on her first run into Sitka, she picked up a "dead head" (log), the size of a basketball and was dead in the water for several hours with several divers trying to chip her out. That was in April in rough weather.

Another time, the Fairweather was leaving Skagway in February, in nasty weather, with 164 passengers aboard. She almost did not make it to Juneau (according to the reports of many passengers), as the wind and water tossed her up and down and sideways.

These "fast" ferries are doublehulled catamarans, with very little ballast to hold them down in the water; therefore, the horrendous weather we have in Southeast Alaska, can have "gusts" of wind that will pick these ships up, throw them around and overturn them. The only time they are really safe is when there is no wind and a sunny day. Perfect for the tourists that the administration wants to cater to, but, definitely not for the Alaskans who live here.

There are many other incidents, which should be investigated, regarding the workings of the administration. Don't take my word for all of this, perhaps check with some of our retired engineers and other officers before we let DOT retire our ships and purchase a fleet of fast ferries for tourism.

One more thing should be considered. How will we get to Juneau from Wrangell? You would have to take a ferry to South Mitkof Island, then drive to Petersburg ($40 cab fare), ferry across the Wrangell Narrows, take Highway 7 to Kake, catch the ferry to Angoon and then take a ferry to Juneau? Who pays for all these little Shuttle Ferries?

And what about our Bellingham run? We have families here that travel south for medical, service men and women who travel via our ferries to and from Alaska, being transferred here with their families and many go to Kodiak; therefore we need the gulf run also.

Governor Egan had the ferries built and in service for all Alaskans in 1963, so that "all" of Alaska would have "roads" to and from our small towns and our Native villages, and now administration wants to "wipe out" everything? (Before the ferries we had to "hitch" rides on fishing boats and other small boats to go from town to town. I even remember the Canadian tanker that docked in Skagway letting people hitch rides to Haines and Juneau).

Our ferries are too costly to run. you say? Has everyone in administration forgotten that this is "our

But, they haven't forgotten to build and maintain the roads in Interior, have they? And now they want to build another bridge for better access to downtown Anchorage from the Palmer/Wasilla area and widen the highway in that area also?

Well, they seem to forget that Southeastern Alaska is part of Alaska too. We may not be as large as Anchorage and for a long time now, we have been the "forgotten" part of Alaska, so we feel that now is our turn to get the maintenance on our ferries and roads.

As you say, our ferries will last another 14 years, so how about "refurbishing," the ones we have left? You know, new engines, new everything from the hull up. The United States Navy has stripped their ships down to the bare hull and re-built them completely at nowhere near the cost of buying new ships.

Write or call our governor and our senators and representatives and get some help for us and "our" highway! Jeanne Lindley Wrangell, AK 99929

Dear Editor,

"There's No Place Like Nome."

I have been an avid Iditaroder and madly in love with Nome (and her people) for the last 28 years.

My first trip to Nome involved a long (and miserable) trek up Front Street to the Polaris to get some ID in an attempt to pull cash from my credit card because three of us had already gone through $5,000. When I hit the front desk of the Polaris, I was freezing and steaming mad, all at the same time. Dear old John Knox questioned my dilemma, handed me $1,000 and told me to send him a check when I got home. WELCOME TO NOME – now that was the true meaning of "There's No Place Like Nome" – and a testament of the character of the people of Nome.

Everyone is aware that the Iditarod has been dwindling over the years, but so far, the fact has not deterred me from showing up there for the last 28 years for Iditarod. Through the years, I have brought both my kids to Nome and have conned several friends into coming to Nome for a great time and a once in a lifetime wonderful experience. I can only assume that each and every person that attends the Iditarod will make a substantial monetary contribution to your local economy through eating, drinking, sleeping, buying gifts, taxi cabs, flight seeing, snow machines, etc. I sometimes shudder at the thought of the dollars I have left in Nome over the years! But we all have to pay for our fun, one way or another.

Now here we are getting close to another Iditarod and I am personally faced with my own dilemma and a BIG unanswered question.

Why should I even consider buying a plane ticket to Nome, dropping $1,500 to $2,000 around town, then have to get up and leave my drink sitting on the bar, put on my boots, hat, coat and gloves to step outside to have a smoke?? Smoking may be a "bad habit," but it is MY habit and I do enjoy a smoke while I am having a drink.

For those people who don't smoke, there is always Airport Pizza to get a bite to eat and a drink. That is their choice. They don't have to go to a smoking establishment. But at least they do have choice.

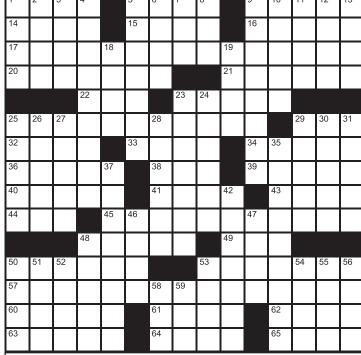

Your council members' recent decisions do not allow me to have a choice. It does not impress me that the "City Council" members have decided to take my choices away from me. Guess I am a low classed citizen that needs someone else (City Council) to make my decisions for me. It is apparent that the local establishments there are having enough financial problems without now taking away a bunch of their business. As for their employees, again, let it be the employee's choice. If they don't like smoke, let them get a job at the hospital or in the library. No one is forcing them to work at the local pub that allows smoking.

Earlier today I was talking with a fellow that had recently passed through Nome. He said he stopped at the Breakers, hoping to find some old friends in there - no luck. It was 5 p.m. and not a single person sitting in that bar. Well of course, he didn't' stick around too long. Wow, that really puts a lot of money through that till—which in turn puts money into the city's pot. Likewise, the local bartenders are probably noticing a drop in their daily tips as well. This all does have a domino effect on everyone with less money floating around the town. In my opinion, it does not take a rocket scientist to figure this one out!

The reason I come to Nome is for 'my" vacation. I love sitting around with the local people, buying each other drinks, smoking my cigarettes, and "chewing the fat." And to date.

Thanksgiving is good for your health

By Bob Lawrence, MD Alaska Family Doctor

There are many aspects of Thanksgiving that make your doctor uneasy. Most of us become sedentary and eat unhealthy portions of fatl a d e n high-carbohydrate foods often for days following the abetes, or cancer. But there is one aspect of the Thanksgiving holiday that may be good for you: being thankful.

In fact, research suggests that the benefit of gratitude may outweigh the risk of any other aspect of holiday feasting.

"Thousands of years of literature talk about the benefits of cultivating gratefulness as a virtue," says University of California Davis psychology professor Robert Emmons.

DOCTOR

Dr. Emmons is a leading researcher in a field of positive psychology that investigates the effects of optimism on a person's health. He states, "Gratitude research is beginning to suggest that feelings of thankfulness have tremendous positive value in helping people cope with daily problems, especially Gratitude is a form of optimism. Optimistic people generally have better health outcomes. They are known to have a stronger immune system. They recover faster from serious illness. They have lower rates of cardiovascular disease. They cope better with mental stress and have lower levels of depression. Some research even shows that positive people live longer.

A Mayo Clinic study published in 2000 showed that pessimistic thinking increases a person's risk of death from any cause by nearly 20 percent. Put bluntly, the benefit of a thankful heart may outweigh the risk of any item in the Thanksgiving dinner.

To be clear, I still believe exercise is important. And I encourage you to go heavy on the vegetables and light on the gravy. Savor the dessert, but consider half-portions. Limit the butter. Eat whole grains. Stop smoking. By all means be healthy.

But remember that Thanksgiving is about something more important than mere physical health. It is a time, traditionally following the harvest, when Americans pause with family and friends to reflect on things in our life that are good, pure, lovely, admirable, excellent, or worthy of praise.

Medical science recognizes that gratitude is a part of a well-rounded healthy life. So if I have a prescriptive recommendation for you this season it is this: when sitting around the table this holiday, take time to be thankful.

Saying it Sincerely

"Enter His Presence!" Pastor Mike Christian, Jr. River of Life Assembly of God Member of the Nome Ministerial Association

"Shout for joy to the Lord, all the earth! Worship the Lord with gladness; come before him with joyful songs. Know that the Lord is God. It is he, who has made us, and we are his; we are his people, the sheep of his pasture. Enter his gates with thanksgiving and his courts with praise; give thanks to him and praise his name. For the Lord is good and his love endures forever; his faithfulness continues through all generations." ~ Psalm 100

How fulfilling is your prayer life? Do you feel you're really making contact with God in heaven or do you feel disconnected?

One of the greatest Psalms in the Bible is Psalm 100! Within it, we can see the steps we should take when entering into the Lord's presence.

• "Worship the Lord with Gladness!" We must first be in an attitude of "Worship" that is accompanied by "Gladness." Our hearts and souls need to already be prepared to enter into the holy presence of our holy Lord and God. We need to be "Joyful" when we come into his presence. Can you imagine how boring it must be for God to listen to people who continuously mumble their prayers? Lift up your voice, bless the Lord, and exalt him! Worship him with gladness!

• "Come before him with joyful songs!" As we enter into the Lord's presence, we should begin singing a love song to him. You and I have been created to "Worship" the Lord with every part of our being. As we sing praises to the Lord, he will "inhabit the praises of his people," and his heart will be filled with love, compassion and mercy towards us.

• "Enter his gates with thanksgiving!" Learn how to "thank God!" Our hearts need to be filled with gratitude for the blessings God has given us. We must learn to express our appreciation for his blessings without being inhibited by those who surround us. He is worthy of all praise! As we begin to express our "thanks" openly to him, the Lord will not only hear our prayers, he will also answer our prayers.

• "Enter his courts with praise!" Begin to tell God how wonderful he truly is to you. Articulate your feelings towards God with your lips. There is true "power in praise!" Our souls should constantly cry out to the Lord with

• "Give thanks to him and praise his name!" You and I have countless things to praise God for - so lift your voice and give him "thanks" and "praise his name!"

So, as we consider all the blessings the Lord has given us through this past year, may we truly be a "thankful" people. As we follow these steps, our prayers will come before the Lord in a beautiful presentation of "worship, praise, and thanks" that will surely touch his heart. By this, we can know that our prayers are being heard.

May the Lord bless and keep you in his mighty hand!

I have no complaints about my contacts to bring home fresh Nome crab. And when all else fails, there is Norton Sound Seafoods that can take my credit card.

Is there a snowball's chance in hell that this no smoking ban could possibly be reversed to allow Nome to remain Nome and be deserving of their motto of "There's No Place Lie Nome"? I am in the process of making my travel plans for this winter/spring, and I would love to make 2012 my 29th consecutive Iditarod. I was shooting for a 30-year record/goal. But again, I cannot justify spending that kind of money to sit there and be miserable. I can stay home, save my $2,000 rather than spreading it around Nome, drink from my own liquor cabinet or hit the local pub here and enjoy my cigarette with it.

In May, 2002, I ran into Larry

Nome Eskimo Community is requesting written, lump-sum, fixed price proposals from qualified licensed and insured contractors for the plumbing repair work in a residential home located in lcy View. Nome Eskimo Community will accept written proposals until 12:00 p.m. (noon) local time, on Monday, December 5, 2011. Proposals should be submitted to: Nome Eskimo Community Attn: Denise Barengo P.O. Box 1090

200 West 5th Ave Nome, AK 99762

IFB and all required forms, wage determinations, proposal rating factors and other information may be obtained from the NEC Housing office.

A site visit is recommended. Each contractor should visit the project site for a clear under-standing of the scope of work prior to submitting a proposal. Site visits may be arranged by contact-ing NEC, at least 24 hours in advance.

For additional information regarding this IFB, contact Glen Pardy, at (907) 443-9105. 11/24;12/1

(Cowboy) Smith in Anaheim Lake, B.C. I was talking about Nome being the "Party Capital of the World." An argument ensured, and Larry (the world traveler that he is) ended the conversation with-

No, Australia is the "Party Capital of the World" but-

Nome is the "Party Capital of the North American continent.'

Is there anything you folks could do to insure that Nome remains Nome? Nome is so full of rich history, life, beautiful fun loving people, etc. It is totally sickening to think that Nome is going to cower down (or has cowered down) and become just another Anchorage, Seattle, New York, Chicago, L.A., etc. I am a firm believer that if you don't like things the way they are here, why don't you go live in Chicago or L.A. or Seattle with all their rules and regulations-i.e., let someone else decide for you what you want and what you need and how you should live your life. I find it simply appalling that the people of Nome would even consider changing anything about Nome.

Reminds me of a news flash I caught a few days ago-I think it was in France where they are now banning catsup—all because someone has decided it is not good for you!

Good Lord, what is this world coming to? And now it is happening in Nome! God help us all. This is no longer America, the land of the Sincerely, Judy S. Lane

North Slope borough spearheads effort to get more funding for seal disease research

The Wildlife Department of the North Slope Borough and a host of collaborators submitted paperwork to the federal National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration on Monday, formally requesting the declaration of an "unusual mortality event" associated with the mysterious sickness that afflicts predominantly ringed and spotted seals.

The declaration of such an unusual mortality event would provide a chance for more funding to study what is going on with the mysterious sickness that manifests in hair loss. skin sores and lesions on face and between flippers in the seals.

Pathologists performing necropsies on seal bodies afflicted by the disease still have no conclusive explanation for the cause of it. North Slope Borough wildlife veterinarian and research biologist Raphaela Stimmelmayr confirmed that there have been no conclusive findings at the moment. "Testing for viral agents have been inconclusive," Stimmelmayr said. "Diagnostic investigations into other possible causes including man-made and bio-toxins, contaminants, radiation exposure and environmental factors are ongoing," Stimmelmayr said.

The North Slope Borough's wildlife management department took the lead in preparing the application packet for the declaration of an unusual mortality event. Collaborators included the federal U.S. Fish and Wildlife agency, NOAA and the Stranded Marine Mammals network program with the National Marine Fisheries Service, Gay Sheffield with the UAF Marine Advisory Program in Nome, pathologist Kathy Burek and Steven Raverty with the Canadian Dept. of Fisheries and Oceans.

NOAA spokeswoman Julie Speegle said that an unusual mortality event declaration would free up more money to investigate the event. The paperwork requesting the unusual mortality event declaration, UME for short, will be reviewed by the Working Group on Marine Mammal Unusual Mortality Events, which is part of the Marine Mammal Health and Stranding Response Program.

The working group was established in 1991 by the National Marine Fisheries Service in response to large numbers of marine mammal deaths in the late 1980s involving humpback whales, bottlenose dolphins and the Exxon Valdez oil spill. The working group's role is to determine if an unusual mortality event is in fact occurring and to help direct the response and investigation. The last declared unusual mortality event was issued this year for the deaths of 146 harbor seals in New England.

Asked if the disease also affects walruses that were seen with skin lesions, Stimmelmayr said, "Nobody knows. We do not know if there is a relationship between the skin sores seen on walrus and the symptoms observed on seals."

Prior to the recent fierce winter storm that hit Northwestern Alaska, a few seals were hauled out on ice pans in the middle of the Snake River near the small boat harbor in Nome. Nome's Charlie Lean observed one of the seals being lethargic with obvious sores on its body. Lean said the seal didn't move for 18 hours, but it was hard to get to as it was surrounded by still open water. Lean also said that after the storm, he found a dead spotted seal. He also found one dead ribbon seal washed ashore on West Beach, just before the mouth of the Penny River, but didn't see any of the symptoms of the mystery disease.

The agencies are collecting any carcasses when found and ship samples out for analysis. The samples from the Bering Strait region are also tested for presence of radio nuclides.

Gav Sheffield with the Marine Advisory Program at UAF Northwest Campus in Nome just returned from Gambell and had traveled to Shishmaref to get a better understanding of the occurrence of the diseased seals. "It's in all three species, ringed, spotted and bearded seals,' Sheffield said.

She said that she is impressed with the hunters of Shishmaref, Wales and Gambell who turned in a ringed and a spotted seal that showed symptoms. "Because people called right away, we got very good samples of this disease," Sheffield said. "People are helpful and vigilant in their observations and that's the kind of teamwork we need to solve this." Sheffield encourages the public to keep calling in and reporting seals that look ill and show signs of the

Although hunters report high numbers of healthy seals available for harvest, the uncertainty of the cause of the disease unsettles subsistence communities who depend on

The question if there is a mechanism in place that would set in motion state or federal help in case that a subsistence disaster strikes, has been met with long silences. The most conclusive answer came from Scott Ruby, director of the Division of Community and Regional Affairs in the State Dept. of Commerce, Community and Economic Development. Ruby said that there is currently no state statute in place to deal with subsistence emergencies. Disaster declarations mostly concern events like storms or other natural disasters. But there is a provision to declare economic disasters as a failed fish run, for example, or a diseased population of seals could create an economic problem.

Radiation?

While many speculated that the nuclear meltdown at the power plant in Japan in March may have trig-gered the event, Jeremy Zidek with the State Department of Homeland Security and Emergency Services said that radiation monitors only saw a miniscule bump in gamma radiation exposure. "There was nothing that would be of concern. It wasn't even an increase of one percent of normal background radiation for a very short amount of time," Zidek said. But these were only radiation measurements taken from the air, not

The EPA had installed an air radiation monitor at the Nome Public Safety building, but the device was removed in May. The EPA has not returned requests for an explanation of the removal by press time.

The publication Seafood.com reports in an article that debris that was swept out to sea after the horrendous tsunami following the March earthquake in Japan would arrive at North American shores earlier than expected. Computer models tracking ocean debris predict that the first items could show up on the west coast and British Columbia very soon. The main field of the expected 20-million-ton debris field is expected in 2013 or 2014.

While the debris itself is not of concern to wildlife biologists dealing with the seal disease, the tracking of radiation is. And as debris moves, so could radiation-contaminated water. Mark Johnson, professor for Physical Oceanography with the University of Alaska Fairbanks School of Fisheries and Ocean Sciences said it would take very sophisticated technology to tackle the tracking of debris and also the possibility of radiation.

"How much of the radiation has been diluted remains an open question," Johnson said. He said that it is theoretically possible that there is contaminated water and that it is a valid concern as the food chain may indeed have been contaminated with radiation

Johnson said that one couldn't rule out that these sick animals have been eating contaminated fish. "This is a very complicated discussion that requires very sophisticated computer models and technology," Johnson said. "We would have to look at the dilution factor, the time frame and the several pathways to come up with an answer." He added that most researchers can't stop what they're doing to focus on research that may shed a light on radiation exposure in the waterways, as interesting and urgent as this may be. But decisive action from political leaders in Congress could free up money to let scientists tackle the problem and find the source of the mystery disease.

Senator Lisa Murkowski's spokesman Matt Felling said that the Senator is following the issue and said that the disease in ice seals was a motivating factor to start up the Oceans Caucus. "There are things happening in our seas - valuable components of our ecosystem and economy – that we cannot understand or explain," Felling wrote in an email correspondence with The Nome Nugget. "We know more about outer space than we do our seas, despite the clear impacts that our marine life and environment have on us."

According to spokeswoman Julie Hasquet, Senator Mark Begich is aware of the seal disease, but the matter has not come up at last week's meeting of the Oceans Subcommittee, of which Begich and Sen. Lisa Murkowski are members. Hasquet said that Begich has asked about monitoring and research needs. "But current budget constraints are an issue," Hasquet said.

The tsunami debris matter did come up in the oceans subcommittee. "A marine debris reauthorization bill was amended to respond to severe debris events such as that generated by the tsunami, within existing budget levels - that would call for a reprioritization of existing funds," said Hasquet. The bill is now pending before the full Senate.

Sea ice blocks fuel barge delivery to Nome

By Sandra Medearis

The ice is in and Delta Western's barge with 1.6 million gallons of fuel will not arrive.

Extreme weather, and not mechanical issues, stayed the barge's departure from Dutch Harbor in time to keep its Nov. 1 arrival date, according to operators of the barge line. The Delta Western barge, carrying 1.6 million gallons of fuels purchased by Sitnasuak Native Corp's

Bonanza Fuel, could not get underway from Dutch Harbor in time to miss the ice that satellite views showed shutting off the Seward Peninsula coasts and filling Norton Sound. It was believed nine or 10 days ago that the barge could still make it to Nome and unload at the outer harbor at the causeway fuel facility. Frigid weather last week closed that possibility.

"Between storms one after another in the Aleutian chain and subzero temperatures, we were under a challenge to get anywhere," Kirk Payne, Delta Western's vice president of supply and logistics, said Monday. "We staged ice flights last week to find leads to get through without success.'

Payne said the barge was en route to Cook Inlet Monday. The barge was carrying three kinds of fuellow sulfur diesel for vehicles, diesel heating fuel and gasoline.

Crowley Petroleum Distribution would be able to sell fuel to Sitnasuak from their local supply according to Bob Cox, vice president of marketing and sales.

"We do not have enough to make up the entire shortage, as we have to retain a margin of safety," Cox said Monday evening. "Whatever we can do to help, we will do.'

Bonanza had asked to buy gasoline and low sulfur fuel from Crowley, Cox said. He declined to discuss the price because we are "two independent oil companies in competition," and that he could not discuss Bonanza's business model.

"If you don't have gas, cost doesn't matter," Cox chuckled, " but to fly it in is unthinkable."

Crowley has some surplus fuel in Kotzebue that he would have on offer if airlifting fuel were necessary. Kotzebue was a shorter airlift and less expensive than flying fuel from Fairbanks, Cox observed. He said panic about a fuel supply shortage in Nome was not justified in the current situation.

Last week, NJUS manager John Handeland said the utility could not spare any fuel to sell. Payne could not say whether DW would have to bear the cost over and above barged fuel, say, the difference between the original DW delivered price and Crowley's fuel price and pay the difference between barge delivery and fly-in delivery should that be necessary, as Bonanza and DW were still

State tallies storm damages

By Diana Haecker

The governor's disaster policy sub-cabinet met on Wednesday, Nov. 30 to assess damages sustained from the Nov. 8 winter storm that hit communities all the way from Bethel to the North Slope Borough.

Jeremy Zidek with the state's Division of Homeland Security and Emergency Management said that three preliminary damage assessment teams comprised of State of Alaska and Federal Emergency Management Agency employees, fanned out to set up shop in Bethel, Nome and Kotzebue, from where each team visited five communities in the respective regions. All teams brought back information to be provided to Governor Sean Parnell and his sub-cabinet to make the call whether or not to issue a state disaster declaration.

Zidek said the Nome assessment team also visited Brevig Mission, Shaktoolik and Unalakleet, Zidek said that most of the damages were to utilities, roads and seawalls. "In some communities there was more concentrated damage, in others the collective weight of minor damages can add up to be significant," Zidek said. The Nome team also wanted to assess damage in Little Diomede but was unable to get to the island since the helicopter service was unavail-

Post Inspector General finds bypass mail "beyond its purpose"

By Diana Haecker

The US Postal Service Inspector General released a report on Monday that claims that the Bypass Mail system in Alaska goes beyond its original purpose. The program has been on the chopping block numerous times as the U.S. Postal Service is seeking ways to cut its losses and become profitable again. A bill in Congress is currently on the table, designed to have the State of Alaska bear the cost of the bypass mail pro-

The Alaska delegation is fighting the proposal, arguing that Postal Service is a guaranteed right. According to the report titled "Alaska Bypass: Beyond its Original Purpose", the postal services lost $73 million in 2010 on Alaska Bypass mail and has no ability to lower the program's cost.

Among the key findings of the report is that Alaska Bypass provides a higher level of service in Alaska than priority mail, but at an average rate

Letters

Dear Editor,

This is a thank you from the inmates of the "rent-a-prison" at Hudson, Colorado. Thank you to all of the family, friends, and concerned individuals who spoke up about the terrible food here.

I had written a couple of letters to the editor, about what was like meat paste containing wharf rat, imported from communist China. What your readers never heard about was all of the phone calls and letters home, saying "Mom, I've lost 13 pounds in the last two months since we have been here. Please send me money so I can live off of commissary."

Cornell owned the place when itfirst opened, two years ago. When GEO had finalized the merger with Cornell, it was about the time in which all of your complaints on our behalf began to have an effect. The Alaska contract compliance officer finally had enough political support to ensure that GEO was in compliance with the meal portion of the contract. The meat-paste slowly got phased out and we even got real eggs for breakfast, every week.

But now GEO is having second thoughts apparently, Cornell had built the Hudson Prison to house female prisoners, but when the lucrative contract did not materialize Cornell was in over their heads, and made a low-ball bid on the Alaska contract.

Now GEO is stuck with a prison, which is probably hemorrhaging money faster than the bean counters

Wake-up Call

Someday our ship will come. Someday, but probably not this year. In an already grim fuel cost situation Nome is faced with a dilemma. One of our town's main fuel supplier's barge is stuck in Adak. It is unable to deliver fuel due to weather (or not). The likelihood of its arrival in Nome gets slimmer and slimmer each day. Now what do we do?

It's time for us to think out of the box (except for the cat). The last storm left us plenty of firewood, never mind that it is encased in ice and frozen to the beach. We still have time to chink the heat leaks in our homes, buy electric heaters, and fish out our colorful sweaters and quilts. We can carpool and hitch rides on a dog team. We need to think of ways to get through the winter with less fuel. We are resourceful, we will do it, but we need to consider this a serious wakeup call. Our city and our local and regional corporations should pool our resources and start exploring and drilling for natural gas. We are probably sitting on top of a bountiful supply in our own backyard. We need to plan to get the drilling rigs in action now.

Nomeites always work well in a crisis. Well, we are in an energy crisis. Time's a waistin'. Let's punch a few holes in our tundra and keep ourselves warm. We don't have to wait for a pipeline. We'll be more self sufficient and able to thumb our noses as those who would ignore us and hold us over an oil barrel. -N.L.M.-

Attorney General resigns

Alaska's Attorney General John Burns last week handed in his resignation. In his resignation letter to Governor Sean Parnell, Burns said that his decision was based solely on personal reasons. "Although I have come to realize that it is possible to live out of a suitcase, doing so is neither fair to family nor particularly conducive to one's health," Burns wrote in the letter. Burns, 52, took the helm of the Department of Law in December 2010, after Parnell appointed then-AG Dan Sullivan commissioner of the Department of Natural Resources.

Ethics committee investigates Young

The House Ethics Committee is extending an investigation into possible violations by Alaskan Rep. Don Young and Rep. Alcee Hastings, D-Fla, reports APRN. The announcement on Monday was the first public acknowledgement by the Ethics panel that it is conducting preliminary investigations of the two lawmakers. The charges against Hastings and Young were recommended to the committee last month by the Office of Congressional Ethics. The committee, dubbed by pundits as a secretive panel, plans to announce whether it will launch formal investigations of the two lawmakers by Jan. 11. The statement from the Ethics Committee didn't indicate what specific matters it is probing with Hastings or Young. According to The Hill Congress blog, the investigation centers around donations made to Young's legal defense fund early this year and whether they exceed the legal limit contributions. Young's spokesman Luke Miller says the Congressman has been "proactive" dealing with the allegations and that when the issue first came up over the summer, Young formally requested that the Ethics Committee look into

Supercommittee fails

The Congressional Joint Select Committee on Deficit Reduction, also called the Super Committee, announced last week that it cannot agree on a plan to reduce the federal debt by $1.2 trillion over ten years. In a statement Alaska Senator Mark Begich said that he is disappointed and frustrated that the Super Committee could not reach a compromise. In January 2013, automatic cuts go into effect as the committee failed. This, Begich said, gives Congress more time to work on a mix of spending cuts, tax reforms and 'smart" investments to get the economy going again.

Majority of BBNC shareholder oppose Pebble Mine

A survey among Bristol Bay Native Corporation shareholders showed that opposition to the proposed Pebble Mine has grown to 81 percent over the past four years. While the Native corporation endorses responsible resource development, the Pebble project is too risky for fisheries and the Native way of life, said BBNC president and CEO Jason Metrokin. "We believe there are other projects that could be developed in our region that would provide jobs and other economic benefits that would not present unacceptable environmental risks to our people and our land," he said.

The results of the new survey show a 12-percentage point increase in shareholder opposition to Pebble Mine compared to 2007, when BBNC conducted their first shareholder survey regarding Pebble. The majority of shareholders support development of other resources within the Bristol Bay region. Eighty-eight percent support renewable resources like tidal or wind, tourism and wildlife viewing (86 percent), sale of rock, sand and gravel (80 percent), sport fishing and hunting (78 percent), and on-shore oil and gas (57 percent). The survey was done by Dittman Research & Communications and included 2,286 BBNC shareholders from September to October 2011.

STATE

These results come on the heels of a separate poll of 802 Alaskan voters conducted by Strategies 360 Polling and Market Research in which 54 percent of respondents expressed unfavorable opinions of Pebble, compared to only 32 percent favorable.

Mysterious seal disease still under investigation

The National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration issued an update on the arctic seals disease outbreak, saying that the North Slope Borough along with other Alaska Stranding Network partners submitted a "consultation" package to the National Marine Fishery Service to have the event declared a "unusual mortality event.'

After necropsies have been done on numerous seal carcasses, tests for common viral pathogens like poxvirus, herpesvirus, papilloma virus, morbillivirus and calicivirus came back negative. All seal carcasses from the Bering Strait region are also going to be tested for biotoxins, chemical contaminants and radionuclides.

If hunters come across seals showing symptoms of hairloss, lethargy and skin lesions, call Gay Sheffield at the Northwest Campus in Nome, Marine Advisory Program, at 443-

Kivalina, Shishmaref, Goodnews Bay, Platinum, Nunam Iqua and a draft disaster declaration from the Northwest Arctic Borough for Kivalina and Noorvik. Zidek said that he is also expecting a disaster declaration from Point Hope via the North Slope Borough. Over 40 communities were impacted in some way by the storm, Zidek said.

"We heard overall that the storm damage could've been much worse," said Zidek. As soon as the National Weather Service alerted the public of the brewing super storm, local governments across western Alaska took protective measures to prepare for the onslaught of hurricane wind conditions and rising waters. "They were creating berms, boarded up windows, hardened their utilities, talked to people about the storm and being prepared, made emergency shelters and so on," Zidek said. "All of that has lessened the impact.'

If the governor declares a state disaster, another wave of assessment teams will fan out to gather more information to be able to come up with project formulations and more concrete dollar figures to fix the damage.

The city of Nome has submitted preliminary numbers to the state, said city manager Josie Bahnke. The city estimates a cost of $60,000 for the loss of gravel material on West F Street, River Street, the Causeway Access Road and Belmont Point also been completely washed out. The City estimated a cost of $10,000 for storm preparation and employee overtime. A coastal engineer with PND Engineers and an engineer with the Army Corps of Engineers were in Nome to assess damage to the Port of Nome. Bahnke said they both walked the seawall the entire length and found it held up pretty well. However, the Causeway Access Road suffered substantial damage as well as the WestGold dock and the City dock at the causeway. The City's Cape Nome Jetty also suffered major damage. The two c-shaped docks lost an estimated five to six feet of fill material, Bahnke said. Kiewit has completed $3 million worth of repairs to the jetty— from damages sustained during the 2004 storm.

Bering Straits Regional Corporation's Banner Peak LLC wind farm sustained an estimated damage of $25,000. BSNC vice president Gerald Brown said that a few of the windmills had minor damages, but expensive labor and parts add up. Prior to the power outage, Brown said, the windmills recorded sustained wind speeds of 95 mph and wind gusts of 125 mph.

Neeser Construction, one of the new hospital building contractors, reported storm damage of $43,000 as they lost a large weatherport tent in the storm.

lower than parcel post; that the system removed an incentive for the State of Alaska to develop infrastructure to connect its rural residents and that the system subsidizes airlines at a loss to the Postal Service.

The scathing report says that Alaska gets special treatment that rural residents in Montana, Idaho or Wyoming don't get. It suggests that the state pay for the bypass mail system out of its $40 billion Permanent Fund account and that the benefits of bypass mail "often seem to accrue more to a wide variety of commercial interests in Alaska than the remote village residents that many believe it is intended to serve," the report reads.

"The Postal Service cannot afford to subsidize a service that has expanded beyond its original purpose and does not appear essential to the Postal Service's mission to bind the nation together through the provision of reliable, affordable, universal mail service," the report says.

The only benefit rural residents derive, the paper says, is that passenger air service is frequent and relatively inexpensive.

In small remote villages serviced by Alaska Bypass, the grocery prices seem to bear little relationship to the cost of getting the products there and may include a variety of other factors, the report says.

The report gives an example for how the bypass mail system enables rural merchants to "reap benefits." "It is often stated that shipping goods via the Bypass program is intended to keep costs affordable for Alaskans living in remote villages. However, Alaska bush residents continue to pay a premium for many goods," the report says.

The example: a bag of Ruffles costs in Anchorage $4.29 retail, $9.99 in Bethel's stores. The bag costs 35 cents in shipping with Bypass mail.

The report concludes: "Rural merchants seem to be among the biggest beneficiaries of the Alaska Bypass mail system. Alaska Bypass shippers pay prices based on parcel post rates, not freight rates or even priority mail rates, although they receive expedited treatment that often exceeds that of priority mail or commercial freight in Alaska. At the same time, rural stores - without much in terms of competition - have little incentive to pass on their transportation savings and residents pay top dollar for groceries and other goods delivered to village stores.

The report continues to say that Alaskan air carriers, both mainline and bush airlines, are benefiting from the non-competitive market, as Meadow Bailey, spokeswoman for the Department of Transportation and Public Facilities said that the damage to the Nome-Council Highway is estimated at $24 million. "The road beyond Safety Sound is completely impassable, opening a trail to access Council will be our first priority," Bailey said. "We anticipate making emergency repairs this spring, the permanent repairs will require a full construction project and will take longer before they are complete." Damage to the road includes severe erosion of the surface and embankment, washed away riprap and soil contamination. Repair work will include reconstructing embankment, removing debris and sand, replacing riprap, removing contaminated soil and resurfacing.

The submerged electrical power intertie between Brevig Mission and Teller came loose and is floating on the surface of the channel between the Teller and Brevig spits. AVEC executive director Meera Kohler explained that the cable is one of two submerged cables meant to carry electricity from Brevig Mission to Teller. A new and efficient power plant in Brevig is meant to provide power for both Brevig and Teller as the antiquated Teller power plant was set to retire. The storm ripped out the submerged cable from the channel between the two communities. Kohler explained that AVEC is assessing the course of action, but has no estimate of how much it costs to resink the cable. "The problem is the timing, we can't do it when there is ice forming," Kohler said. One option, she said, is to employ a helicopter to apply weights to sink the line and anchor it on the ocean floor.

According to Jeremy Zidek, there is no timeline for the state to declare a disaster after the sub-cabinet's meeting. In the past, he said, decisions have been made within a few hours of presenting the information to the cabinet. The deadline to request federal assistance is December 13.

Trooper Sgt. Merrill to leave Nome

By Diana Haecker

Alaska State Trooper Sergeant Andrew Merrill is moving up the ranks and by doing so, moving out of Nome. Merrill was promoted to the lieutenant position for the C detachment, which encompasses Nome, Kotzebue, Dillingham and Kodiak. Merrill is slated to start his new job in Anchorage at the beginning of March and will stay in Nome through the end of February.

"It's bittersweet to go," Merrill told The Nome Nugget. "We are sad to leave, but it was an opportunity we couldn't pass up."

Merrill and his family moved to Nome from Bethel in 2007, filling the sergeant position for the Nome Trooper post. He said in his new role of Lieutenant he would still oversee Nome and the surrounding villages. "I'll be able to come out and do post visits, visiting the outlying communities and participating in meetings," Merrill said. His leadership style is marked by accessibility to community members and an attitude of cooperation through communica-

Asked if this style would be encouraged to be continued as a new sergeant will take the helm in Nome come March, Merrill said, "Each Sergeant has his or her own style, but I do encourage open communication and working with all departments."

So far, there has not been a new sergeant selected. The Trooper Colonel will decide whether the job will be opened up for a bidding process or if will open for a promotion process, which basically gives lower ranks an opportunity to advance.

Merrill said he would miss everything about Nome. "We loved how we were accepted by the community of Nome," Merrill said. "We will miss being so close to the ocean, the hunting, the fishing, but mostly, I'll miss the people of Nome."

prices are not tied to market rates.

If the Postal Service were allowed to contract for air service at market rates, the report says, it is possible that the service could be significantly cheaper.

In seven points, the inspector general suggests changes to the system. One change would be to charge priority mail rates instead of the lower parcel post rates. Another suggestion is to make Bypass mail its own break-even program to charge cost-based prices to recipients.

The author also suggests that the federal government or the State of Alaska to reimburse the Postal Service for the losses associated with the Bypass mail.

The most radical suggestion in the report is to get rid of the bypass mail program as rural Alaska knows it. "The Postal Service could be completely removed from the Alaska Bypass program since it plays only a minimal role in the process today outside of paying for it," the report said. "Shipment of commodity goods to remote merchants should be ceded to the private sector freight market in Alaska— as it has in the other 49 states."

NSEDC Community Benefit Share remains steady at $100,000
By Tyler Rhodes, NSEDC Communications

NOME—Norton Sound Economic Development Corporation's Board of Directors has voted unanimously to maintain the Community Benefit Share distributed to each of its member communities at $100,000.

The board approved the annual distribution at its third quarter meeting Nov. 2 in Unalakleet. Over the 13-year history of the Community Benefit Share program, NSEDC has directly invested $12.45 million into the region, equating to a total of $830,000 for each of NSEDC's 15 member communities.

The Community Benefit Share was established by NSEDC in 1999 with an initial distribution of $10,000 to each community. The share has increased several times since its inception, doubling to $20,000 in 2000 and gradually climbing to $100,000, where it has remained since 2006.

Recognizing that the municipal government represents all residents of a community, NSEDC makes the Community Benefit Share distributions to the local government. Through their public meeting process, each member community's municipal government decides how the share will be spent. Many communities use the funds to cover fuel expenses, often purchased at an advantageous price through NSEDC's bulk fuel program. Communities have also used the funds for search and rescue equipment, police service, reducing the cost of utility and electrical service, elder and youth programs, and various infrastructure purchases and improvements.

"NSEDC's Board of Directors realizes the importance of the Community Benefit Share for each of our 15 member communities," said NSEDC Board-Chairman Dan Harrelson. "This program is particularly strong because the decision on how to utilize the funding is made at the local level by those who know their community's needs the best."

Julie Yoder Elmore said the organization of the feast was a committee effort lead by the Nome Community Center and committee members Fawn White, Paula Davis, Julie Elmore and Chris Steppe. Various Nome businesses, organizations and individuals donated the food, including six hams, 12 turkeys and the traditional side dishes of corn, green bean casserole, mashed sweet potatoes and marshmallows, stuffing and cranberry sauce.

at decorated tables, dropping off intricately made desserts like rainbow Jell-O, pies and chocolate turkeys. The tables were set with white linens, dinner rolls, butter and cranberry sauce. A special touch were placemats of children's drawings and writings about thankfulness.

About 30 volunteers were on hand to serve, bringing full plates, water, juice or coffee to Thanksgiving guests. Elmore said that other volunteers cooked beforehand, as the committee distributed the donated ham and turkeys to be cooked by volunteer chefs.

"Our community really does come together for positive events that are inclusive of everyone," Elmore said.

The organizers were prepared to serve 250 meals and took the rest of the feast to guests at NEST.

Shoulder pain: How to regain pain free movement

By Bob Lawrence, MD Alaska Family Doctor

The shoulder is the most mobile joint in the body. Most joints only bend and extend. The shoulder, with a complex collection of muscles and ligaments, can rotate through an arc of almost 360 degrees without popping out of place. This complex mobility allows human beings to throw, pull, swing, push, lift, and embrace. The only limit to the shoulder's reach, in most people, is a small area on the upper back.

The shoulder is a ball-and-socket type of joint. The muscles that surround and move the shoulder form a sheath called the rotator cuff. A tightly woven network of ligaments holds the shoulder in place.

Complex systems with multiple moving parts are prone to problems. The shoulder is a good example.

Pain in the shoulder may result from a tear in the muscles of the rotator cuff or from inflammation of the tendons in the shoulder, called tendonitis. Arthritis in the ball-and-socket joint of the shoulder may also cause long-term pain.

Sudden pain in the shoulder associated with an injury should be medically evaluated as soon as possible. Sometimes other diseases cause shoulder pain. Therefore, pain associated with heart symptoms, upper abdominal pain, or high fever should always be evaluated by a doctor.

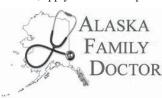

However, if you experience shoulder pain that is less severe, perhaps associated with a recent change in activity or increase in lifting, there are several things you can try before going to the doctor.

First, rest the shoulder from any activity that causes or worsens the pain.

Second, use an anti-inflammatory medication like naproxen (Aleve) or ibuprofen (Advil, Motrin) to help with pain and reduce underlying inflammation.

Third, apply ice or a cold pack to the shoulder for 15 minutes at a time throughout the day. Ice applied to an injured joint is an excellent anti-inflammatory treatment and often helps with pain. A bag of frozen peas or a plastic bag full of snow works great for this purpose. Always place a thin cloth between the cold pack and skin to prevent injury to the skin.

Finally, begin range of motion exercises when tolerated. The two most important exercises are called "pendulum swings" and "wall walking."

A person performs pendulum swings by leaning slightly forward allowing the arm to dangle toward the floor. Gently swing the arm back and forth in all directions for 30-60 seconds. Some people find making the shapes of the letters of the alphabet is helpful. Weight may be added as tolerated in the form of small dumbbells or household objects like canned food or partially filled milk ings.

Wall walking involves stretching the shoulder muscles and ligaments by using the fingers to walk up the face of a wall. The exercise is first performed facing the wall with the arm extended forward using the fingers to increasingly reach higher on the wall. Always stop if there is pain. Later, when tolerated, the arm may be extended out to the side walking up the wall until the arm is fully extended above the head.

Relative rest, ice, medication, and proper stretching will resolve most minor shoulder pain within a week or two.

See your doctor if shoulder pain does not respond to these simple steps. People who do not respond to conservative therapies may respond to steroid injections into the shoulder region. Magnetic Resonance Imaging (MRI) of the shoulder and surgery may also be warranted if the pain is severe or if minor pain persists more than 6 to 12 months.

Arnie befriended any person who came across his path. He was a softspoken, hard working man. Arnie's spirit was so gentle, that even people he didn't know sensed it.

He had deep passion for hunting, everything the land and ocean had to offer, even with his limited supplies, he found a way to make it out.

Arnie was an all around mechanic, never failing to give a lending hand to anyone that mentioned they needed the help.

Arnie met the love of his life Valarie Reamer in the summer of 2004, two years later Arnie's pride and joy, Samantha Lynn joined them. Later they were married in Shaktoolik on September 23, 2009 officiated by Palmer Sagoonick. Arnie had deep compassion for Rebecca whom he raised and always reminded his wife and family to include her in everything. Arnie truly loved his Arnie deeply cared for his parents. He was always concerned about how they were. Mom constantly worried about him because she knew how rough the ocean can get. They shared such a special bond. Every time we spoke to him, it was always, "How's Mom?" Be sure and tell her hi, I'm OK, tell her not to worry about me, I'll be OK.'

Arnie was a kind, caring person, he was everything a person should be to others. He often read his Bible and shared God's word with family and friends. He constantly reminded us, he was praying for each one and he was always forgiving, even under the circumstances. He readily depended on Ahguupan for prayer.

Arnie is survived by his mom Hannah Taka, wife Valarie, daughters Samantha and Rebecca, motherin-law Thelma Evan, step-children Amber, Alexis and Anthony. And his brothers Lynn Jr. (Marie), Leonard, Ricky (Tere), Randy (April Savetilik); sisters Nora (June) Paniptchuk, Ellen Kulukhon, Maggie Taka (Rick Stolz), Carrie Takak, Hannah Lynn (Lars) Sookiayak, and Isabelle Jackson; uncles and aunts Ida Nakarak, Dan Takak, Helga Saccheus, Kenny (Grace) Takak, Esther Kimoktoak, Edna Purcell, Lillian Keith, Luther (Jeri) Nagaruk, Sheldon (Emily) Nagaruk, Maggie (Milton) Cross, Joe Murray, Judy (John) Jaworski, Rodney Nagaruk, Ethel Adams, Chamble Adams and Mary Apok, 25 nieces and nephews and 15 great nieces and nephews.

Arnie was preceded in death by his dad Lynn Takak, Sr., brother Carl W. Takak, brother-in-law Jones Kulukhon, nieces June Allison Paniptchuk and Shasta Soolook, grandparents Carl and Agnes Takak, Paul and Josephine Nagaruk and Maggie Nassuk, uncles/aunts Peter and Morris Takak, Ellen Jackson, Agnes Savetilik, Nathan Nagaruk, Irene Kavairlook, Ida Murray, Alfred Adams and John Purcell.

Saying it Sincerely

Karen Sonray, Pastor Our Savior Lutheran Church Member of Nome Ministerial Association

"We look not at what can be seen, but at what cannot be seen; for what can be seen is temporary, what cannot be seen is eternal." 2 Corinthians 4: 18 As we have just completed Thanksgiving and are heading toward December, my thoughts often go out to people who have lost a loved one this past year and are experiencing the holidays for the first time without them. For them this time of year can be truly difficult and dark. While the world seems to be filled with messages of happiness and joy, they are keenly aware of the absence of their loved ones. I hope we can all make an effort to reach out to families we know who are walking through that experience and take the time to listen or simply be with them. These families are living in the tension of the darkness and light of the season.

"The darkest hour is just before the dawn," is an old saying that I have found to be poignantly true. As we approach the darkest hour of winter, we are reminded of the need for hope in our lives. Hope is not the same as optimism. Hope is facing the darkness and still believing in the coming of dawn. Hope is believing in the things unseen. Hope, in the words of Eleanor Roosevelt, is lighting a candle instead of cursing the darkness

The time before Christmas is traditionally a time of hope. We are waiting for a special guest. We are waiting for God to break into our lives. This can be a time of anticipation and preparation for the arrival of the one who was sent to a hurting world.

Many of us fill up our time before Christmas with busyness, shopping, cards, eggnog, decorating, cooking. These are all things that can be fun and spirit-filled. But they can also be stress-filled. Too easily we find ourselves missing the most important part of the season: God is breaking into our lives, our darkness, our grief, our world. God is coming in the deepest hour of our gloom and loneliness. Will we be awake to see his coming? Or will we be so distracted by the things we are doing that we miss what he is doing?

There is joy in waiting, expecting, praying, and hoping for God's arrival. God is the one who brings the dawn, brings the light, brings new beginnings and brings Christmas.

May we wait in hope as we sit in darkness.

"There will be no more night; they need not light of lamp or sun, for the Lord God will be their light." Revelation 22: 6

Will development turn Western Alaska into another Avatar?

Provided by Elim Students Against Uranium

Picture grand mountainous vistas, huge herds of caribou streaming across a river - this monumental setting that environmentalists and writers, such as Jack London, planted in our collective mind is changing. This vision is on a collision course with a huge number of plans for development that range from offshore exploration to uranium and coal mining throughout Alaska. Alaska cannot have both. Just one uranium pit mine opening on the Seward Peninsula, will cut a giant swath across the southern Seward Peninsula that will make the area unlivable. Where will the people, affected by the pollution, go after their homeland is destroyed by airborne radioactivity, where will drinkable water be found? The mining developers will be gone, unaccountable for the death and destruction they have caused. Washington, DC will ignore our protests, and who can clean up the mess that should not have occurred in the first place?

If the developers have their way,

Alaska will turn from the last great place on earth to a barren wasteland created by politicians in Washington, DC and Juneau. Shockingly enough, the Native corporations have bought into and are a part of the planning process. Last year $170,000,000 was paid to them by mining conglomerates. Which makes you wonder about native corporations — are they looking out for the best interests of their shareholders or are they pushing for mineral extraction and development despite the huge cost to the environment, loss of habitat and for the residents, loss of their ancestral homeland and their health?

While the mining concerns downplay the damage to the environment and stress the cleanup efforts that will follow in their wake of the destruction, the facts do not lie. Virtually every mining site in Alaska has never been satisfactorily cleaned up or returned to the original condition prior to development. Industrial waste from gold and silver mining 110 years ago has yet to be cleaned up, making it hazardous to use the tundra in winter, and streams that once held migrating fish no longer support life. Moreover industrial pollution from China and radioactivity from the Fukushima nuclear explosion is currently finding its way to Western Alaska.

The future outlook of development in Alaska is depressing if the

Phony BBB complaint email hits businesses nationwide Fake complaint notice lands reports from businesses

Anchorage, Alaska - Locally and nationally, businesses are reporting questionable complaint notices disguised as official Better Business Bureau correspondence. Phishing emails—which prominently feature BBB's name and logo-indicate that businesses have received BBB complaints and must respond by clicking on enclosed links or attachments.

Locally, BBB serving Alaska, Oregon and Western Washington has received dozens of reports of these fake complaint notices.

Emails appear to come from fraudulent copy-cat senders: "risk@bbb.org," "alert@bbb.org" and "service@bbb.org." Enclosed is a link that appears to go to bbb.org, but instead, it directs users to an illegitimate Web address—which may cause viruses on recipients' computers.

can keep track. Naturally, the food budget is going to suffer again. The contract calls for the Hudson Prison to pay for all of the food that we consume. This part of the contract needs to be re-negotiated.

This will be a lot cheaper than the alterative, because if the Hudson Prison ever goes bankrupt, it is doubtful if Alaska can ever recover much of the monies already paid out, and probably none of the expense of an emergency relocation of 1,000 in-

GEO has already shut facilities without getting hurt in the process, well, they never got hurt, but some state probably took it in the back. Joseph James, HCF Hudson, CO 80642

Dear Editor,

I want to say something about young people needing their high school diploma. Young people need to graduate and receive their diploma. Without that diploma or GED, a lot of opportunities for you are closed. You need a diploma to work or get further education or training.

I want to ask you young people to start listening to your elders. When we ask you to go to school or get your GED do it or your future will go down the drain, and for Pete's sake leave that alcohol and drugs alone!

Sincerely, Peter Johnson Elim, AK

P.S. Young men and women should get training and get a job. Your parents can't afford to support you.

National Snow and Ice Data Center

SEA ICE EXTENT—Satellite data shows recent ice conditions blocking barge delivery of 1.6 million gallons of fuel from Dutch Harbor refinery to Nome. Extent images show the total area of ocean covered with at least 15 percent ice. Other data from NSIDC show that large areas had 100 percent Monday. Ice has closed the Northwest Passage. Polar areas appear to be ice-free, as the satellite cannot "see" those areas. Red line shows median 1979-2000.

oil, gas and mineral geologists and politicians have their way, and will ensure that Alaska becomes the wasteland that the rest of America has already envisioned. The balance of power between the Department of the Interior, Bureau of Land Management, Bureau of Indian Affairs, State Department of Natural Resources and the Native corporations weighs heavily in their favor versus the people in the small villages who have to live with mining operations in their area and deal with the results. This scenario can be understood by watching the film, Avatar where the Navi, indigenous free people from the unspoiled planet Pandora, are forced into a confrontation against a mining consortium that eventually destroys them and their land. The plight of Western Alaskans against federal agencies working with wealthy mining conglomerates to destroy the land and abusing its resources is akin to what happens to the people of Pandora.

The only option is through education and immediate counter action. In the early 1960s environmentalists and the people of Pt. Hope on the Chukchi Sea, successfully fended off the planned detonation of five nuclear explosions - the Project Chariot debacle — and once again Pt. Hope is fighting offshore exploration and drilling.

Today, just 30 miles away, the residents of Elim, Alaska are facing the horrors and destruction of their homeland should uranium mining encroach on their land, homes and lives. According to Emily Murray, organizer of Students Against Uranium, "The school students, in studying the history of uranium mining elsewhere, found out that active and abandoned uranium mines have long-term devastating effects on the health of people living in proximity to mines and to their food chain. Abandoned uranium mines have never been cleaned up and have now become superfund sites."

The decisions we make today against mining can have far reaching results if we have the courage to fight for what we believe in. Avatar in the Arctic? Fiction or reality? We're closer than we think.

Students Against Uranium are school students at Elim, Alaska who do not want a uranium mine to be excavated near their village at Boulder Creek. This creek is in proximity to the Tubuktulik River which flows near their village. Should this mine go through, the results within 10 years hence will essentially ruin the watershed, pollute the air and environment eradicating fish stocks, land and sea mammals and ruin the health of nearby villages, namely White Mountain, Golovin and Elim not to mention the waters of Norton Sound.

ironing out an agreement on that score.

"We are in Nome to find a solution collectively and we are committed to a solution," Payne said. "We absorbed considerable cost in trying to get the fuel to Nome."

The unanswered question is whether local consumers will pay more at the gas pumps and when the oil trucks reel out the hose at their homes. Delta Western is a transportation company, not a fuel vendor, but transportation cost is a factor in local pricing.

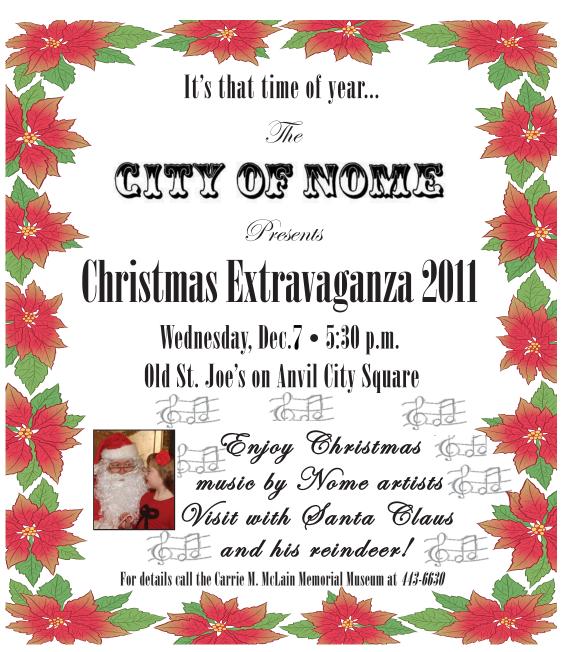

Local consumers could lose also through loss of revenue to City of Nome and its port. Port of Nome stands to lose revenue from failure of the barge to arrive. On the portion of fuel purchased locally, if any, from another company, the Port of Nome has already garnered three cents a gallon for fuel transfer across the port. The DW barge load of fuel would generate $48,000 in port fees. Fuel delivered by airplane does not generate the three cents per gallon. After fuel arrives, the City gets 5 percent sales tax on gross sales. A 1.6 million gallons sold in town would generate close to $500,000 into City coffers, the loss of which could be a blow to the budget. However, the tax and port fees are expected to be only delayed until when the barge can ply open water in the spring.

The ice has rapidly returned for the winter. Seawater that churned in the storm and flung rocks, trash and logs at the town Nov. 8-10 became still a week or so ago when ice put a lid on it. However, the second largest amount of ice receded during the summer season this year since satellite surveys began in 1979. Ice extent for October was the second lowest behind October 2007. The ice reaches its lowest ebb for the season in mid-September.

Four or five days ago, a belt of ice surrounded the Seward Peninsula, blocking sea-lanes and blocking harbors. During the late part of last week and the weekend, satellite views from the National Snow and Ice Data Center showed ice filling the Bering and Chukchi sea waters between Alaska and Russia's far eastern coast along the Chukotka Peninsula and extending southward along the Kuskokwim delta to the Alaska Peninsula with the Kotzebue and Norton sounds iced in. New ice tightly closed off the Northwest Passage from Nome to Greenland in October.

Residents of Western Alaska watch ice go in and out as it affects transportation and subsistence wildlife sources and activities. Scientists watch the ice because its ebb and flow affect the temperature of Arctic waters and its ecosystems that have an effect on ocean life the world over.

The Russians are coming with fuel for Nome

By Sandra L. Medearis

In an ice-bound land forsaken by sun and ships bearing commodity deliveries during the arctic winter, a Russian double-hulled ice-class tanker and a small marine transportation company may save citizens of ice-bound Nome from high fuel prices stemming from a winter fuel shortage. Sitnasuak Native Corp. over the weekend, refined a deal to hire an Alaska company, Vitus Marine LLC, to bring in 1.5 million gallons of fuel from South Korea with the Russian tanker T/V Renda. The project, if it clears U.S. Coast Guard and environmental agency hurdles, would almost replace 1.6 million gallons of fuel and a barge delivery that did not arrive after the original carrier, Delta Western, cancelled its voyage earlier this month. Sitnasuak and consumers hope to see the Russian reach Norton Sound before New Year's Day.

Sitnasuak had been searching "around the clock" and "around the hemisphere" with a lot of variables for a solution since Delta Western cancelled the delivery over a week ago, according to Jason Evans, chairman of Sitnasuak's board of directors. They considered many alternatives, even the new but unlicensed Mat-Su Ferry.

The emergency puts the dearth of icebreaking services up in lights. Alaska state officials and the congressional delegation have been chipping away at the resistance to equip the American arctic with icebreaking capabilities to clear shipping lanes for supplies and commerce with renewed mineral exploration in northern seas. Barging in the fuel on the Russian tanker, that can chunk through four to five feet of ice, would "save millions over a solution to fly in as much as 500,000 gallons of fuel in 100 flights with a tanker aircraft capable of taking 5,000 gallons per flight from Kotzebue or Fairbanks," Evans said. "It will cost significantly less and if successful, will be the first time fuel has been delivered over the ocean to Western Alaska in the winter. It could open up year-around fuel delivery to Nome."

The T/V Renda is no stranger in the Alaskan shipping industry nor is Korean fuel. The tanker has carried fuel to the Aleutian chain from Sahkalin Island. Vitus Marine, operators of fuel barges owned by Alaska Village Electric Cooperative that provides power to 54 villages, has a domestic and Far East fuel supply chain. Learning that the red-hulled Renda was in Vladivostok following a charter, Vitus Marine got busy, according to staff.

Coming out of a very cold November, December started with a massive blizzard and a winter storm advisory that was in effect for the better part of last weekend. The Saturday snowfall broke the record for the day with 6.5 inches. The previous record was at 6.1 inches, on Dec. 3, 1979.

The Pineapple Express system warmed up temperatures to 50°F in Delta Junction, dumped 7 inches of snow on Nome over the weekend and created winds that peaked at 48 mph on Saturday night at 9:20 p.m. The high temperatures in Nome on Sunday measured 31°F. The storm let up Saturday evening when winds calmed down a bit and visibility improved

National Weather Service meteorologist Wes Adkins points out an interesting part of this particular storm. "The backside was just as nasty, long lasting and actually more potent than the front side," Adkins said. On Sunday, a strong south, at times southwest wind began to blow again. While there wasn't much new snow falling, only half an inch was measured for Sunday, the high winds kicked up the snow and caused very poor visibility, especially outside of town. Nome Public Works and the Alaska Department of Transportation snow removal crews were out in force to clear Nome's roads. By Monday night most roads were cleared and towering snow berms piled up on the centerline of the larger roads were removed and transported to the Nome snow dump.

Alaska Airlines canceled all three daily flights on Saturday and Sunday.

The National Weather Service also reports that last month was Nome's coldest November in 48 years. "November of 2011 began with a storm to remember and ended with such a deep cold wave that it became the coldest November since

Bypass mail report incorrect, says congressional delegation:

Local merchants, airlines refute allegations reaping benefits of bypass system

By Diana Haecker

The Alaska Delegation last week refuted United States Postal Service Inspector General David Williams' report and said that statements made in the report are inaccurate, incomplete or not well considered. Bypass mail was put into effect to deal with the Alaskan realities of few roads in a vast state with a scattered rural population that amounts to 82 percent of all Alaska communities being off the road system. Bypass mail transports mostly groceries directly from shipper in either Anchorage or Fairbanks to rural recipients, bypassing the postal system entirely.

On the Web:

The delegation wrote a letter to Williams, questioning nine points brought up by the IG's report that was titled "Alaska Bypass: Beyond its Original Purpose." A main point of criticism, also often brought up by local merchants, is how the post office would handle all the bypass mail if the USPS would do away with the bypass system and force merchants to fly in everything via parcel post. The delegation asked for an analysis of the costs of staff, equipment and facilities that would be necessary to process parcel post goods.

The report alleged that rural merchants and air carriers are reaping the benefits of the fast delivery of goods at parcel post rates. The report gives an example of simple math. A bag of Ruffles potato chips costs $4.29 in Anchorage, bypass mail shipping costs about 35 cents and both stores in Bethel charge $9.99 per bag. The post office concludes that the difference goes into the merchant's pockets. Not so, the delegation says in their letter. What about calculating in business costs such as fuel, utilities, health care, housing and wages?

One of the few independent village stores is the Nayokpuk General Store, operated in Shishmaref by Percy Nayokpuk. The store has been in business for 51 years, Nayokpuk said. Nayokpuk chuckles when he hears the post office's comparison of potato chips and how merchants make a profit. "Really? I don't sell potato chips anymore because they get here damaged," he said. Since bypass mail bound to Shishmaref and all the other outlying communities, the bypass mail gets handled twice - in Anchorage, in Nome and then at its destination. When flying in unpressurized air planes, the bags pop open and Nayokpuk is stuck with boxes and boxes of un-sellable goods. That is an example of the downside of bypass mail, it's at shipper's risk. "It's not cheap to ship to rural places and there is no insurance available," said Nayokpuk. So, the loss has to be made up by raising the price on goods that make it through unscathed.

If bypass mail were to disappear, as one of the suggestions of the IG's report outlines, Nayokpuk said that his store wouldn't be able to stock meat, frozen goods or perishables. But that doesn't mean it would have to go back to the days in the 1960s when the store made one huge order that would arrive by barge in the summer. Before the bypass mail

In the NSEDC report in the December 1 Nugget Tyler Rhodes bragged about the $100,000 each of the 15 Norton Sound communities will be getting from NSEDC this year. That's $1.5 million in total. That sounds pretty good until you look at the bigger picture.

Between the City, NJU and the schools, Nome has a $35 million annual budget; 100k from NSEDC is nothing more than a drop in a large bucket. Last year NJU used NSEDC's gift to buy light bulbs. I can't get particularly excited about new bulbs for the street lamps even if they are more energy efficient—100k just doesn't do much for Nome

If Nome, with its 3,600 residents received the same amount per person from NSEDC as the 115 people who live in Wales, that would be $3.1 million for City Hall and I'd be a little more impressed even though I still wouldn't agree that a pointless giveaway is the best use of CDQ program funds.

Even for the smaller communities, $100k isn't a lot of money these days. Teller uses theirs for the 4th of July picnic and other miscellaneous expenses but the CDQ program is supposed to be building self-sustaining economies and providing people with incomes so they can afford to buy their own hot dogs. Some of the CDQ groups are doing that but NSEDC isn't and Tyler needs to explain why not.

During 2010, the CDQ groups took in almost $400 million in combined revenues.

NSEDC is the largest of the six CDQ groups. The residents of NSEDC communities comprise 34 percent of the people living in the 65 CDQ eligible communities. Therefore, you would think we would be getting about 34 percent of the revenue, right? Well that's not the way it is. During 2010, NSEDC came in dead last in terms of per capita revenues and it wasn't even close. NSEDC made $3,805 per person compared to the top revenue earner, Central Bering Sea Fishermen's Association which made a whopping $71,608 per person. So what went wrong? There is no way to know because NSEDC's financial information is kept secret; they don't talk about that.

What does NSEDC expect to get in return for the $100,000 giveaways to the city councils? I suspect they are buying political support for NSEDC's continued unfettered access to the CDQ program millions. During 2010, NSEDC's administration spent $4.9 million on themselves. That's 49 times what it doled out to each of its member communities. Does that make sense? It does if you are one of the chosen few in NSEDC administration. Tim Smith Nome, AK 99762

Foster's Report

By Rep. Neal W. Foster,

27th Alaska State Legislature House District 39

It's now December and the second session of the 27th Alaska Legislature is right around the corner. We will be convening next month on the 17th. Tempers ran hot at the end of the last session and we will have to see if time back home has softened some of the animosity that plagued us last year. I'm hopeful that differences in the House and Senate can be overcome and that compromise on the issues at hand will be found, but the most of the wedges dividing us are still in play. The issues remaining are difficult and we will continued on page 11

They Just Don't Get It

Recently the U.S. Postal Service Inspector General issued a scathing report on the bypass mail service in Alaska. The Inspector General has totally wrong, partially inaccurate and just plain uninformed reasons for eliminating bypass mail. However, the Postal Service Inspector General is not the only entity that just doesn't get it. The recent media hype over the ice blocked fuel barge got national attention

Well-meaning folks in the Lower-48 were concerned that pregnant women in Nome would be unable to get to the hospital due to a speculated $9/gal. fuel price. Some folks emailed The Nugget suggesting we tell folks to close off their north-facing rooms and insulate our homes. Alaskans know one can never have enough insulation. Others, including the USPS suggested that Alaska build highways to the 80 percent of her communities that are off the road system so we could truck in our fuel. Can you hear the fiscal screams in Juneau and Washington? Sure, we're going to build a highway over thousands of miles of marsh, tundra, mountain ranges and rivers. Then there are the bridges to build to our island communities, not to mention the National Park Service land and wilderness preserves. Let's not even think about how we would keep these roads open in the winter. This is Alaska, not Florida.

We are the keepers of the Last Frontier and stewards of a wealth of minerals, petroleum, natural gas, wildlife and enough fish to feed the world. We are a state of strategic importance and we deserve to be provided the mandated USPS Universal Service. Those of us who reside in the 80 percent of Alaska's off-road communities have our reasons for living here. Our isolation solidifies our sense of community and keeps the road-system crazies off our doorstep. We are strong, self-reliant and resourceful, and we don't need to be treated like second-class Americans by Washington politicians and bureaucrats. — N.L.M.—

News from around the state

Compiled by Diana Haecker

Feds sign off on oil development in NPR-A

The U.S. Fish & Wildlife Service and the Environmental Protection Agency have reached an agreement with ConocoPhillips that could clear the way for major development plans in the National Petroleum Reserve-Alaska. The agreement allows ConocoPhillips to build a pipeline and bridge over the Colville River to its proposed Alpine Satellite Development Plan in NPR-A. The development would be first ever within the reserve. ConocoPhillips has said in past statements that the development could add as much as 18,000 barrels of oil a day to the Trans-Alaska pipeline. The Army Corps of Engineers needs to approve the project by issuing a permit. The Alaska delegation and Alaska Governor Sean Parnell as well as state legislators were overjoyed to receive the news.

Arctic report cards documents dramatic warming trends

The Arctic Report Card compiled by the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration concluded in their 2011 report that the Arctic Ocean sea ice further declines in thickness and the summer extent of the sea ice cover. The ocean is also warmer and has fresher waters at the upper levels. Because of more open water, biological productivity at the base of the marine food chain has increased and sea ice-dependent marine mammals continue to lose habitat. Increases in the greenness of tundra vegetation and permafrost temperatures are linked to warmer land temperatures in coastal regions, often adjacent to the areas of greatest sea ice retreat. A second key point in the 2011 Report is the repeated occurrence of 2010 Arctic winter wind patterns that mark a departure from the norm. These changes resulted in higher than normal temperatures in the Arctic, with record ice sheet mass loss, record low late spring snow cover in Eurasia, shorter lake ice duration, and unusually lower temperatures and snow storms in some low latitude regions. A potential indicator of recent atmospheric changes was record low ozone concentrations in March 2011. The 2011 Report Card shows that record-setting changes are occurring throughout the Arctic environmental system. The September 2011 Arctic sea ice extent was the second lowest of the past 30 years. The amount of older, thicker multiyear ice continues to decrease and both the Northern Sea Route and the Northwest Passage were ice-free in September. The Arctic Report Card reflects the work of an international team of 121 researchers in 14 countries and is based upon published and ongoing scientific research.

House hears of need for Arctic icebreakers

Just as the Healy showed up at Nome's horizon last week, the House of Representatives Transportation and Infrastructure subcommittee held a hearing on the need for more icebreakers in the Arctic. Lt. Governor Mead Treadwell, Coast Guard Admiral Robert Papp and others testified to the effect that the U.S. is missing the boat. Treadwell said that it is now time for the nation to act to add new polar icebreakers to the Coast Guard's fleet. He said, first, the United States must commission new heavy icebreakers to operate in the Arctic. As a second step, the US needs legal measures in addition to icebreakers to protect US shores from the dangers of unregulated itinerant vessels carrying hazardous cargoes near US coasts. He urged Congress and the Administration to fulfill the legal mandates that are already in place regarding icebreakers. "These mandates reflect needs in commerce, science, and protection of Americans' sovereignty, safety, and security. The State of Alaska is responding to opportunities and risks associated with the historic changes in global shipping patterns resulting from changes in the Arctic Ocean," Treadwell said.

Also included in the bill are amendments that Senator Mark Begich inserted, authorizing a land exchange between the Municipality of Anchorage, Eklutna, Inc., and Joint-Base-Elmendorf Richardson: and allowing for expanded space-available travel for National Guard and Reserve members as well as surviving spouses.

•Local merchants, airlines refute allegations reaping benefits of bypass mail

went into effect, Nayokpuk said, there was a weekly freight flight directly from Anchorage to Shishmaref. Reinstating a direct flight would maybe mean less handling, less damage and less loss on the merchant's side, Nayokpuk said. "But bypass mail would still be very much needed to make everything out in rural areas affordable," he said. Heating oil prices in Shishmaref these days are $6.49 per gallon, $6.90 buys one a gallon of gas.

In Savoonga, the store manager of the local ANICA store, said a few years ago, the post office designated Savoonga a hub for bypass mail. "We haven't had a single direct flight from Anchorage," he said. He echoed what Nayokpuk said about shipper's risk and that they have to compensate for losses and damages of goods that occurred during shipping and when the bypass pallets are stored outside on the airport tarmac in Nome. "Those Nome ravens sure get into our groceries," he said. But those are realities he can live with. However, if bypass mail were to go away, he said, "prices might go skyrocket."

Mike McNally, manager at the local Nome Alaska Commercial store said that if bypass mail were to be shifted to the post office via parcel post, the USPS would be hopelessly overwhelmed. "Just as an example," McNally said, "let's say you take all 12 AC stores in Alaska, and – just to say a number — they ship 25 pallets a week at 1,000 pounds. If you give all that to the post office, it would gridlock their system. They would not be prepared to handle that much mail, and that's just for one company," McNally said. McNally agrees with the assessment that prices of groceries would go way up, as bypass mail is still the most cost effective method to get goods into bush communities. He also questioned the IG's famous potato chip calculation. "If something costs $1 in Anchorage and 25 cents to transport it up here, you still have to charge more than $1.25," he said. "The cost of doing business in rural Alaska is high because of higher wages and energy costs," McNally said.

Mike Stedman, president of the Alaska Air Carriers Association said in an email interview with The Nome Nugget that the program is often inaccurately referred to as an "entitlement" program. "The US Postal Service is the primary beneficiary of the Carrier Inducted parcel post program," he wrote. "The USPS saves money by not handling parcel post because it can be handled by the air carrier and delivered directly to the customer: i.e., no USPS employees pick up, weigh, bundle, sort, handle, or deliver these parcel post shipments.

Five mainline carriers and 20 smaller bush aviation companies deliver bypass mail throughout the state. Stedman said it is a win-win for all parties. "Shippers and consumers benefit from the reduced handling of parcel post, and the USPS enjoys a cost savings from reduced manpower, facility requirements and subsequent maintenance and employee benefits."

Stedman said that federal legislators would continue to target Alaska to save money. "One thing is certain: Alaska can expect more federal scrutiny and more threat of financial constriction," Stedman wrote. He added that outreach to affected entities and the gathering of data should become a priority of the State.

The postal report states that the rates that the postal service pays to airlines for the transport of bypass mail are an "artifact of a bygone era." How so?" asks Bering Air owner Jim Rowe. "The rate methodology and terms are constantly being updated by the Department of Transportation," Rowe told The Nugget. "The DOT determines what they pay and it's not an exorbitant amount of money," Rowe said. He refuted the notion that airlines are making a quick buck with bypass mail. He said that airlines like Bering Air have over the years invested in infrastructure like air craft, hangars, fuel trucks and fork lifts to expedite bypass mail efficiently and at no cost to the

Rowe said if bypass mail were to go away, the goods still would have to be transported to the villages. "We would still do the transportation, just under a different formula," Rowe said. "It wouldn't affect us so much as it would the prices of goods in the villages." However, if bypass mail were to go away and mail were to be moved on cargo airplanes, Bering Air would have to raise their rates on passenger flights to destinations like Savoonga and Gambell. Bering Air moves 17 million pounds of mail a year, 95 percent of that being bypass mail. Rowe said that bypass mail accounts for about 28 percent of Bering Air's revenue, and that Bering Air's business is further diversified to services such as passenger transport, charter flights, helicopter services and Russian travel.

Rowe points out that it is not true as stated in the IG's report — that bypass mail has created greater passenger air service supply than there is demand. On paper, he said, it may look like it, but in reality, it is a different story. Rowe explains that on combined bypass mail and passenger flights, they remove six seats from the Caravan to make space for freight and then fill the rest of the 9-seater plane with passengers. On the way back to Nome, there usually isn't any freight being backhauled, but three to four passengers are transported to Nome. "On paper it looks like we're having more seats than there is demand, but in reality the plane is full," Rowe said.

He is not optimistic that the idea of putting bypass carrier contracts up for bid would be beneficial to the system. "You'd end up going through different providers every couple of years because the lowest bidder would go out of business," Rowe explained.

Marianne Lindsey, spokeswoman for Alaska Airlines agrees with Rowe

that the rates are not out of the ordinary. "The rates the Postal Service pays to mainline carriers is consistent with our published general freight rates, including fuel and security charges, to a regional hub. The freight rates are market-driven rates, thus it is not likely that the USPS would see a dramatic savings in a competitive bid environment." Alaska Airlines moves 3 million pounds of bypass mail a year.

The postal service's IG proposed to use part of the Alaska Permanent Fund to pay for the $73 million the post office loses annually with the bypass mail service. So how does Governor Sean Parnell feel about that? "The governor does not support using the Permanent Fund to offset the cost of Bypass mail," wrote Governor spokesperson Sharon Leighow. "The United States Postal Service is legally obligated to serve all Americans. Alaska should not be financially penalized because some citizens live in rural communities."

The problem is bigger than just the Alaska Bypass mail system, said Jim Rowe. "If you read between the lines, there is a lot of envy of Alaska in the report," said Rowe. While the rest of the nation does not enjoy a $38 billion savings account as Alaska has with the Permanent Fund, the rest of the nation also doesn't have to deal with harsh weather, vast expanses and spread out communities. Rowe points out that the State has put in significant investments in building and maintain rural airports. "In the lower 48's that's mostly done with federal funds," Rowe said. Senator Mark Begich in order to garner support for bypass mail survival asks Alaskans served via bypass mail to take a photo of the goods they can't live without.

The delegation challenged the authors of the report to supply answers to the allegations that the state doesn't pull its weight to create infrastructure, that the rates paid to airlines are over paid and that the permanent fund should be tapped into to help pay for bypass mail.

Governor declares State disaster for 2011 West Coast storm

By Diana Haecker

On Monday evening, the office of Alaska Governor Sean Parnell sent out a press release that Parnell has declared a state disaster for the 2011 West Coast storm. A subcabinet met last week to determine if damages of the Nov. 8/9 storm were severe enough to declare a State disaster. With a disaster declaration in hand, the State's Division of Homeland Security and Emergency Management can now activate the state's public and individual disaster assistance programs, and request a federal disaster declaration for public assistance. Jeremy Zidek with the State Department of Homeland Security and Emergency Management said that the total of damages in Western Alaska is estimated at $29.9 million. The Nome-Council Highway sustained the highest damage, estimated at $21.5 million. Zidek said that the state now petitions the federal government to declare a federal disaster in order to qualify for federal assistance funds. The road repair would be eligible for federal Highway Administration funds, with the state having to match about 9 percent of the repair costs.

The storm was billed to be the storm of the century and slammed into western Alaska with high winds of up to 125 mph – measured before the height of the storm at the Banner Peak wind farm — and a storm surge of almost 10 feet above normal in Nome.

The storm affected communities with hurricane-force winds and coastal flooding from Hooper Bay to the North Slope. According to the governor's press release, more than 35 communities and two boroughs have reported impacts from the storm, including damages to roads, airports, helipads, electrical distribution systems, seawalls and utilities. Three State and FEMA joint preliminary damage assessment teams visited 15 communities following the storm and reported a wide range of minor and significant damages from high winds and coastal flooding. "As we focus on the more severely impacted communities and help them rebuild, we will not lose sight of the communities with minor damages. The collective weight of minor damages can have a lasting impact on a community," said Governor Parnell.

He said, "Along with the activation of our state's disaster recovery programs, we will seek a federal disaster declaration." Activation of the state's public and individual assistance programs will enable the state to provide grant funding to individuals and families for damages to their homes and property, and help restore public facilities to their pre-disaster condition

The public assistance program is designed to help state, local and tribal governmental entities, and certain private non-profit organizations restore infrastructure damaged by a specific event to pre-disaster conditions. For the current year, the maximum amount for the individual assistance program is $15,700. If a federal disaster is declared, the federal assistance would provide 75 percent of the funds, with the state paying the remaining 25 percent.

Family escapes house fire in Savoonga uninjured

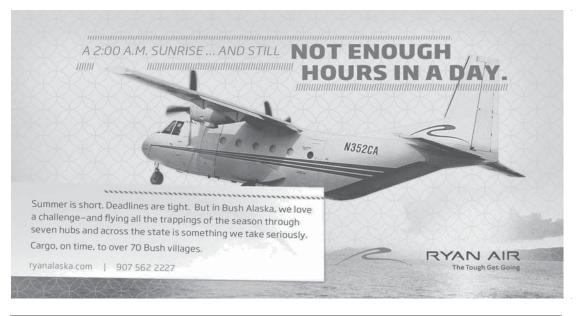

By Diana Haecker

A house fire in Savoonga destroyed a four-bedroom house with smoke and water damage, but didn't harm any of the five people who lived there.

Orlan Wongittilin, his girlfriend and their two children, 3 and 4 years old, as well as a cousin of Wongittilin's were sleeping when Orlan heard the carbon dioxide detector go off around 2 a.m. on Thursday morning. He woke up his family and evacuated them out of the house. They all went to stay with Wongittilin's mother. Around 8:30 a.m. they received a phone call that Orlan Wongittilin's house is burning. The Savoonga Fire Department responded and deployed three hoses to fight the fire. Police chief Mike Wongittilin said that the fire started in the boiler room and that it spread underneath the floor board and ignited the insulation. The fire department extinguished the flames, but there is substantial damage. "At this point, the house is not livable anymore," police chief Wongitillin said.

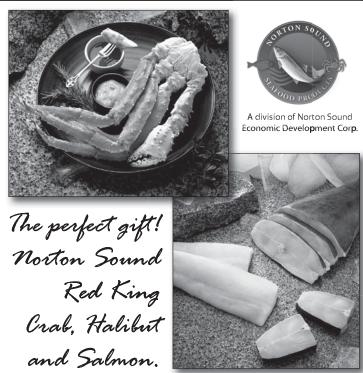

Orlan Wongittilin said that they don't have insurance and are not sure how to proceed to fix the damage. The police chief said, in order to make the house habitable again, it needs to be gutted and completely rewired.

Orlan, his girlfriend and children are in need of clothing. Although firemen helped toss some of their belongings out of the house, while they fought the fire, Orlan said, they need shoes, pants and jackets. Orlan said they are in need of underwear for his girlfriend, size 6, shoes ladies size 6 and small sized sweaters. He is in need of boots, size 10.5 and shirts. The children are also in need of pants and shirts, girls size 1 and 4T boys. An account has been set up for the Wongittilin family at the Credit Union 1 with the account number 495693S76. Clothing and houseware donations can be sent via Bering Air to the Savoonga Volunteer Fire Department.

helped the volunteers narrow their search and they almost reached Vial on Wednesday night, but stopped at mile 41 and called off the search for the day.

The next morning the search continued. AST Sgt. Andrew Merrill and wildlife trooper Brian Miller flew an aerial search, with Merrill flying a 206 Cessna over Glacier Creek Road and Nome-Teller Road, and Miller piloting a Super Cub up the Kougarok Road. At the same time, Nome Search and Rescue ground teams fanned out and drove up the Kougarok Road, where Vial was found shortly before the troopers spotted his vehicle from the air.

According to Steiger, Vial's truck got stuck in a snowdrift and he was able to occasionally run his car to stay somewhat warm. Steiger said that Vial wasn't dressed to walk and only wore tennis shoes and jeans. A blanket and a blue tarp were all that Vial had to stay warm. According to Steiger, Vial stayed in the vehicle and out of the wind and tried to stay awake during the ordeal.

Sgt. Merrill as well as Steiger confirmed that Vial was uninjured.

Steiger said that it is always a good idea to let people know where one is going when heading out to enjoy the outdoors. Also, even if riding in a car, it would be a good idea to dress appropriately for the cold.

"The Nome Search and Rescue crew, again, has done an exceptional job," Sgt. Merrill added.

WRESTLING TOURNAMENT—The gym at the Nome-Beltz High School was busy last weekend with wrestlers from Northwest Alaska competing for top honors.

Nanooks strong but fall short at Northern Conference Invitational

By Stephen Palmatier

This past weekend, the Nome-Beltz High School wrestling team hosted the Northern Conference Invitational where they fell just short finishing in second place behind champion Kotzebue. The Nanooks, who put on a good showing, simply did not have enough individuals to stay with Kotzebue.

"We're not satisfied with second place, but that's where we're at," said Dudley Homelvig, head coach of the Nanooks wrestling squad.

The disappointment of Homelvig stems from the Nanooks being so close to the victory. In the 14 different weight classes, the Nanooks were able to take home five titles while Kotzebue took home six. The difference between the two squads came from the second and third place finishes. Nome finished with three second place finishes while Kotzebue had four, and the Nanooks only had one third place finish to Kotzebue's four.

The champions for Nome were Jason Gilder in the 113-pound weight class, Emery Booshu in the 120-pound class, Dion Williams in the 126-pound class, Chris Harvey in the 160-pound class, and Anvil Boeckman in the 285-pound class. Also, the Nanooks had second place finishers with Alex Gray, Gabe Cabrera and Junyor Erickson and a third place finisher in Gabe Smith.

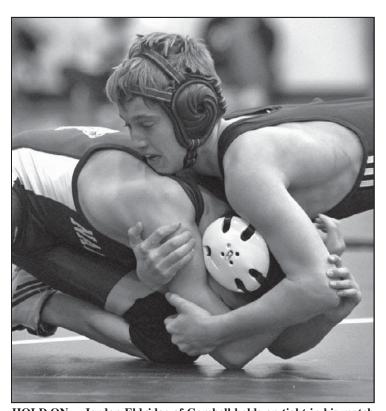

One shining moment in the tournament for Nome came when they announced that Emery Booshu was named the most outstanding wrestler in the tournament. Booshu, who won the 120-pound weight class as the second seed defeated his teammate Gabe Cabrera who had the top seed.

"He's easily our top freshman," said Homelvig speaking about Booshu. "He will be seeded in the top two spots for the state tournament most likely."

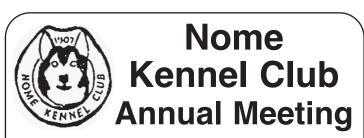

The wrestling season now turns to next weekend for the state tournament in Wasilla, the final invitational of the year for the Nanooks. The Nanooks are sending nine wrestlers to the invitational where they will try to have success as a team.

"I expect Dion Williams, Gabe Cabrera and Emery Booshu to do a great job at state, and hopefully we can win a few matches in the tournament," said Homelvig.

Blizzard can't stop Firemen's Carnival

By Diana Haecker

"Nothing can stop the Firemen's Carnival from happening," said Nome Volunteer Fire Department Assistant Chief Jerry Steiger. Not even a raging blizzard, such as the one that hammered Nome on Saturday and continued into Sunday. The filled parking lot in front of the Nome Rec Center was a good indicator of the crowds that were inside. Cars were parked all the way to Steadman and taxis continued to spit out loads of passengers at the front door. The Firemen's Carnival is Nome Volunteer Fire Department's fundraiser of the year, and one of the most anticipated events, not only for Nomeites, but also for visitors from the surrounding communities.

Steiger said that despite the inclement weather, the turnout has been just as good as any other year. "We had a very good Carnival," Steiger said. "We filled the gym for the better part of three hours in the evening, and had a good crowd still present for the drawing at midnight."

Steiger, also the meteorologist in charge at the Nome National Weather Service, said he floated the idea to cancel the Firemen's Carnival when he saw the storm coming. The idea was not received too well and consent was that rain, snow or shine, the show must go on. And so

There was not an empty seat at the bingo tables – at least not for long. The wheels of fortune were spinning non-stop doling out stuffed toy animals, turkeys, hams and Tonka toys to lucky winners. Several booths to provide fun and games as fundraisers for their organizations.

Rotarians sold their legendary rib dinners and Nome Preschool parents were busy baking cakes as prizes for winners of the "cake walk." Big with the kids were booths that spraypainted hair and applied temporary tattoos. The younger children were magically drawn to the free balloons and hats handed out by volunteer firemen.

Steiger said that 10 retired firemen came out to help staff the booths. One of the main attractions is the drawing of the raffle prizes at

How to stop common nosebleeds in children

By Bob Lawrence, MD Alaska Family Doctor

Bleeding from the nose is a common childhood problem in winter. It often causes distress for children and parents. Nosebleeds are rarely a serious threat, and if treated properly, the bleeding can be easily controlled at home.

Most nosebleeds originate from a network of blood vessels on the septum of the nose, the thin barrier between the two nostrils. During winter this front portion of the nose becomes very dry, making the delicate tissue sensitive to any trauma from picking, scratching, or blowing the nose.

Allergies, sinusitis, and viral colds can further cause inflammation of the membranes in the nose leading to nosebleeds. Head trauma, even minor bumps to the head, can set off nasal bleeding that may or may not be serious depending on the severity of the injury.

When bleeding occurs, it is important for parents to stay calm and have children gently compress the soft portion of the nose (everything below the bony ridge) using a finger and thumb, tissue, or soft cloth. It is best to have your child lean slightly forward to prevent any blood from running down the back of the throat and causing vomiting.

Hold compression for at least 10 minutes. Avoid frequent peeking to see if the bleeding has stopped.

Do not place anything in the nose to stop the bleeding. People often make the mistake of packing the nose with tissue. This causes further trauma and can make the bleeding harder to control.

Over-the-counter nasal decongestants that contain phenylephrine (Neo-Synephrine) or oxymetazoline (Afrin) may be used short term to control recurrent bleeding from the These medications cause blood vessels to constrict and thereby slow bleeding. They should not be used for more than 2-3 days in a row and are not recommended for children under 6 months of age.

Take your child to the doctor if the bleeding lasts more than 20 minutes despite using compression, or if he or she has bleeding from other sites such as the gums. Also seek medical help if you suspect your child has placed a foreign body in the nose.

Take your child to the emergency room if the bleeding is heavy or causes your child to appear pale, weak, or lightheaded. Any nose bleeding from a head injury should be also be evaluated by a physician, especially if you suspect a broken nose.

Nosebleeds may be prevented by using humidifiers, nasal saline sprays, and trimming fingernails (even the most hygienic children may pick or scratch their noses while sleeping). Antibiotic ointment may be spread lightly around the nostril opening to prevent dry cracked membranes.

Your physician can evaluate your child for more serious causes of bleeding if nosebleeds become frequent or recur despite taking proper steps for prevention.

White House names Teressa Baldwin "Champion of Change"

A Kiana youth was honored as a Champion of Change last week at the White House. Teressa Baldwin is the founder of an organization fighting suicide in Alaska. She has been directly impacted by suicide and wanted to take action to help reduce the rate of suicide in Alaska. As a junior in high school, Teressa was appointed by Governor Sean Parnell to the Statewide Suicide Prevention council and became one of the youngest appointed representatives in the state of Alaska. Following her appointment, Teressa started her own organization teaching her peers about the signs of suicide and sharing her own story about how suicide affected her life. After facing common hurdles to suicide prevention programs, including high costs and low enrollment numbers in trainings, Teressa has been able to work with 12 schools on suicide prevention programs and is hoping to expand to more. Teressa feels that her work is part of her life goal to help lower the rates of suicide in not only Alaska but the rest of the country.

The Champions of Change program was created as a part of President Obama's Winning the Future initiative. Each week, a different issue is highlighted and groups of Champions, ranging from educators to entrepreneurs to community activists, are recognized for the work they are doing to better their communities.

The first Santa Claus

At the Nome Post Office there is a little red basket so children may send their letters to Santa Claus. Nome's City Extravaganza held at old Saint Joe's last night included the opportunity to visit with Santa Claus. Weather permitting, through Operation Santa Claus, he will have completed a visit to Wales on an Alaska Air National Guard C-130 providing Santa with the opportunity to spread more holiday spirit. The imagination is easily stirred in the mind of a child that all things are possible if only we ask. Indeed, Jesus himself advised us, "Ask and it will be given to you; seek and you will find; knock and the door will be opened to you." (Matthew 7:7).

Jesus was encouraging us to pray and this is something the original Santa Claus did quite often. Santa Claus is the shortened and Americanized version of Saint Nicholas, a real person who lived at the end of the 3rd and beginning of the 4th century in what is now modern day Turkey.

At the age of 17 Nicholas lost his mother and father due to the plague. Nicholas had loving parents who were excellent Christian witnesses. His parents, who cared for the sick, shared their wealth with those in need and taught their son to be kind and generous. Certainly Nicholas would have asked God for consolation and a new direction in his life. Through prayer and perhaps the guidance of an uncle who was a bishop, Nicholas decided to dedicate his life to serving God in serving others. Nicholas gave away the money and property he inherited from the death of his parents and studied to become a priest. He was ordained at age 19.

As a priest, Nicholas proclaimed the good news, he fed the faithful with the bread of life and in his caring way, he did everything he could to help the poor. One legend, explains it this way. At that time, young women needed to have a large dowry in order to marry. One poor family had three daughters, and the father thought he would have to have one of his daughters become an indentured servant in order to pay for the dowry of the other two sisters. Nicholas heard about this predicament and tried to help out. But he didn't want to embarrass the father so he went by the house late at night and tossed in three bags of gold. Even though he did all this in secret, people soon discovered how helpful he had been and spread the story far and wide.

Nicholas continued to serve as a priest with humility and generosity. When he was 30 years old, his uncle the Bishop of Myra died. He was saddened once again as he mourned the loss of a close relative who had helped him to grow in his faith and understanding. The bishops of the Province of Lycia gathered in Myra and with the help of the Holy Spirit selected Nicholas to be the new Bishop of Myra.

Life as a bishop was filled with struggles and tears. Nicholas continually turned to the Lord in prayer. The emperor didn't like Christians and had Nicholas jailed for seven years. Nicholas didn't lose heart. He continued to pray and teach and do his part. In time Nicholas was set free. As always, he continued to serve the poor in humble charity. Today, Saint Nicholas is honored for spreading God's love all around. Stories of his caring heart and miracles abound.

Since Nicholas died on the 6th of December, each year on his feast day we offer up this short prayer. We humbly implore your mercy, Lord: protect us in all dangers through the prayers of Bishop Saint Nicholas, that the way of salvation may lie open before us.

Lisa married her high school sweetheart, Tony Keller. Lisa and Tony welcomed two beautiful daughters into their family, Janelle and Erica, who were both born in Nome. In 2004 she blessed her family once again with another beautiful daughter, Kylie.

Lisa moved to Anchorage in 1987 and made it her permanent home. She attended two years of college and eventually went on to start her own successful bookkeeping company, Number Crunchers. She continued to work throughout her difficult illness until shortly before her death. She showed amazing endurance and tenacity and taught her family and friends about her strength and fortitude during the biggest challenge of her life.

Lisa loved to cook and to get the family together for important events and holidays. She thoroughly enjoyed camping and always made sure that at least one gourmet meal was provided and that everyone's favorite munchies were on hand.

Lisa was preceded in death by her husband Tony and her brother Kevin. She is survived by her loving daughters, Janelle Keller, Erica Keller, Kylie and her daddy Robert Bartch; father and stepmother Bill only have a short time to address them (90 days). Bearing these factors in mind I think the scope of major legislation will be limited. I do want to clarify that while the press and others have focused on the conflict between the House and Senate, Senator Olson and I maintain a great working relationship and cooperate when it comes to looking out for House District 39's best

The largest issue before us is the Governor's proposed oil and gas tax reform, House Bill 110. The Bill passed the House last year mostly unchanged from the Governor's proposal. The Senate is now in charge of its fate and has made no secret that they intend either to kill it or give it a major overhaul. While the differences in our respective bodies has been highlighted over the last year I think it's important to point out that everyone in the House and Senate, regardless of party is trying to get to the same place. Oil production is declining and it is imperative that we halt or reverse this decline in order to ensure the Trans Alaska Pipeline's continued service. It has been said that oil is the lifeblood of the State of Alaska, and while I wouldn't characterize it that way I would say that oil has given most of Alaskans a standard of living that we would not otherwise have. Without oil revenue we would not be able to build or maintain roads and airports, we would not be able to help rural residents with Power Cost Equalization, and we would not be able to support schools and social programs in the manner we've all become accustomed to. All sides in the legislature want to see sustained and sustainable oil production. The difference lies in how we get there.

We may see a new push to revive the States Coastal Zone Management Program. It died last session when a compromise could not be found that all parties could live with. The proposed ballot initiative to reconstruct the program may motivate all parties to resolve this issue via the deliberative process. The initiative in its current form is seen as unduly burdensome to development by some members. They may prefer trying to pass a bill that would be more industry friendly. Others, who see the initiative as having the

COAT DRIVE

Do you have any coats collecting dust in your closet or storage? That's the question posed by folks concerned about keeping people warm this time of year.

There will be a Coat-Give-Away day Saturday, November 26, from 1 p.m. - 5 p.m. at Our Savior Lutheran Church located at Fifth Ave. and Bering Street. There is a special emphasis on children- and youth-size winter coats, but any coat donations will be appreciated.

Bring your slightly-used coats to the church Monday through Friday, 9 a.m. - 5 p.m., Sunday 10 a.m. - 1 p.m. or call 443-5295 for other hours. Any coats that are not given away on November 26 will be given to the Methodist Thrift Shop or other organizations in need.

right balance of development and local input, might prefer passing a compromise bill now rather than gambling on a statewide initiative: "A bird in the hand is worth two in the bush"

It is likely that we will be dealing with a gas line bill in some form. There has been significant interest in a "bullet line" from the North Slope to Anchorage. As the production in Cook Inlet decreases South Central residents are desperate to find a cheap replacement for their energy needs. Fairbanks is also trying to find a new and economical way to power its utilities and provide heat. This is important to the Bush because the price of power in these urban centers sets the level of PCE

Should the cost of power in Anchorage skyrocket we will end up paying more in our utility bills. If Both these proposals have certain challenges involved, including the lack of economies of scale and possible issues with the current AGIA line that Trans Canada is working on. Another possibility we may see is the scraping or reworking of AGIA to look at a large diameter instate line that would run to tidewater. This line would have off take points to provide gas to Alaskan communities while the majority of it would be shipped to markets abroad. The benefit of this line is that it allows our Alaskan communities to takes advantage the economies of scale and export line provides and would result in lower unit costs than a bullet line. The disadvantage of a large diameter line is that it is exponentially more expensive to construct and involves much more intricate market forces. This issue will not be entirely resolved this session but will remain a concern in the foreseeable future.

As with every year, the main event will be the Operating and Capital budgets. While the Operating budget is the larger of the two it is unlikely to be as controversial as the Capital budget. The Operating budget provides for the day to day operations of the State: keeping the runways plowed, funding social programs, keeping light and heat on in the schools, etc. The Capitol budget focuses on building infrastructure; building new schools, water/sewer systems and runways. ## Russians are coming with fuel for Nome

371-foot tanker vessel, to inspect the ship and approve its entry into U.S. waters. Sitnasuak has asked the USCG to keep its scientific research icebreaker Healy near Nome to assist the delivery if necessary.

"The Coast Guard has been extremely helpful over the weekend, as has Mead Treadwell, our lieutenant governor," Evans said.

Mark Smith, of Vitus Marine, said many are watching the operation as it unfolds.

"Everybody is highly motivated to help Nome out," Smith said. "This is seen as a high visibility project that sort of highlights the importance of arctic operations so everyone from the congressional delegation to the Coast Guard to the ADEC to Alaska Pilots are all highly interested that whatever we do that we do it safely and in close cooperation with all interested parties.

"It's a huge undertaking, and we're a small startup company so of course, it's very exciting for us."

The federal Merchant Marine Act of 1920—the "Jones Act"—forbids ships not American-owned or American flagged from taking cargo from American port to American port. Thus, the Renda cannot pick up fuel from Dutch Harbor and transport it to Nome. When the Renda weighs anchor to bring the fuels—heating fuel, low sulfur fuel and unleaded gasoline—it will voyage from Vladivostok to Inchon, Korea and then literally break into Nome.

Whether the Renda will be able to unload at the Port of Nome fuel facility is not certain, but the tanker is fitted with a mile-long hose to offload from the roadstead.

Even if all the fuel were delivered earlier by barge without the necessity of heroic measures, Nome, a town of 3600 is already facing its most expensive winter with gasoline and heating fuel from Sitnasuak and Crowley Petroleum Distribution both averaging about $6 per gallon. If a dream of having access to fuel delivery throughout the year were to materialize via tanker, local suppliers could take advantage of lower prices through the year as happens in other parts of the country. As it stands, consumers are stuck with the summer purchase price when barges load up, and can only feel wistful when prices go down in the Lower 48 states. If the price is high in September with the arrival of new supplies, consumers will pay that price for the remainder of the year.

The threat of a $9 per gallon price quoted from anonymous "officials" in a recent widely published article overshot his predictions of his worst scenario, according to Evans.

"Nine dollars a gallon is a really simplistic view," Evans said last week. If we figured inventories and averaged overall, $9 a gallon is not a very accurate number."

Getting a barge delivery through Vitus Marine would cut in half any increase from short supply, Evans said. "We are OK on heating oil. It is low sulfur and gasoline we need."

Before the Russian ice breaker idea came over the horizon, Crowley Petroleum Distribution offered to sell Sitnasuak 300,000 gallons of vehicle fuel from its reserves. That, Evans said, would leave ballpark 500,000 gallons still needing to be brought in by air after the first of the year, depending on demand. He said consumers could help by cutting back gasoline and diesel usage, for example, warming their vehicles for only half as long.

While many use taxis in Nome, the hospital has a patient driver to carry elders and others, including pregnant women, to the clinics. State and Nome City vehicles fill up under contracted bid prices. A contract to provide school bus rides contains a range of fuel costs. If the cost of fuel exceeds the contract price, then the school bus operator can collect the extra fuel expense from Nome Public Schools.

Sitnasuak had been working with Delta Western, but found their offer of compensation insufficient.

"I didn't feel that what they offered was fair to Sitnasuak stockholders or fair to the citizens of Nome," Evans said.

Delta Western representatives said last week in Nome that they had been working with Sitnasuak and wanted to be part of the solution, but had not reached an agreement on compensation for the failed delivery. They blamed a storm Nov. 8-10 and suddenly appearing ice for blocking the Delta Western barge. However, Port of Nome officials said the Delta Western barge had been scheduled to arrive in October. The National Snow and Ice Data Center satellite data maps show open water in the month of October. Kirk Payne, a vice president at Delta Western, said the delay of an earlier schedule had been caused by weather elsewhere.

Vitus Marine is a marine services company providing fuel and freight to customers in Alaska's most remote areas. With both domestic and Far East fuel supply chains, the company is well positioned to provide creative solutions in response to Nome's fuel supply crisis. Vitus was formed primarily in response to Alaska Village Electric Cooperative's desire for a long-term plan to address its fuel and delivery needs.

"We are driven by the needs of our membership and one of their primary needs is affordable energy. Our tugs and barges were built to serve our communities in extremely challenging circumstances. Providing 1963," a NWS synopsis reads. The average temperature was 7.4°F, 9.5°F colder than what is considered "normal" for November. The notable cold wave began Nov. 21, when temperatures dropped between 15 and 25 degrees below normal.

The high of the month was during the big storm on Nov. 9 with 36°F and the low of the month occurred on Nov. 27 and 29 with -17°F.

The Weather Service also notes that November was drier than normal with only 0.49 inches of precipitation instead of the normal 1.22 inches. There was only 7.4 inches of snowfall, compared to a normal amount of 12.1 inches.

Nome with fuel this winter has direct benefits for our member villages, and we are delighted to be part of the solution," Meera Kohler, CEO and president of AVEC, said.

RIMSCO, established in 1992 as a sea transport, marine survey and appraisal company, owns the Renda and is based in Vladivostok, the eastern terminus of the Trans-Siberian Railroad. The Renda was built in a Finnish shipyard in 1984 and upgraded to a double-hull tanker in 2010 to satisfy requirements of the 1990 oil pollution law.

In the Sea of Okhotsk, Renda recently made a more than 30-kilometer corridor in the ice to help a ship registered in the port of Bremen, Germany. The Passat of more than 5,000 tons of displacement was bringing a consignment of cargo from the Sakhalin port of Korsakov to South Korean Pusan.

Three in a row: Winter storms break records

By Diana Haecker

One blizzard chased the other last week, leaving barely enough time for Nomeites to dig out and come up for air. Although Nomeites are used to back-to-back snow dumps, business as usual in Nome came to a temporary halt last Wednesday and Saturday due to enormous snowfall, wind and white out conditions. On Wednesday, school was canceled; most offices were closed or closed around noon as peak winds of 45 mph on Wednesday morning chased tons of snow around Nome's streets.

ns of snow around Nome's streets. Nome Police asked people to travel only if necessary. Visibility neared zero and it was almost impossible to see stuck cars or people walking. Even Nome cabs stopped operating for a short time and the Nome Christmas Extravaganza, set for Wednesday evening, was postponed to the next day. The storm broke two records for snowfall. National Weather Service meteorologist-in-charge Jerry Steiger said that on Tuesday, Dec. 6, 4.1 inches of snow fell, besting the record set in 1993 with 3.9 inches.

On Wednesday, a whopping 5.6 inches fell, breaking the 1981 record of 4.4 inches for Dec. 7.

The low-pressure system responsible for the almost 48-hour winter storm started on Tuesday afternoon, dumped more than 9 inches on Nome and fizzled out with 1.5 inches of snow on Thursday.

The temperatures warmed up to 33°F and at times, rain mixed with snow and puddles of open water appeared in the side alleys where snowmelt dropped from the rooftops.

The Alaska Department of Transportation and the City's public works brought out their crews in force and plowed out roads before the Saturday storm hit. And then it was a déja-vue moment all over again. On Saturday morning snow began to blow and socked the city into a complete whiteout. Average winds of 32 mph gusted to 53 mph from the east,

Use of City facilities to cost more in 2012

By Sandra L. Medearis

The Nome Common Council approved increases in fees for City facilities at its regular meeting Dec. 12.

The fee hikes, as high as 25 percent, cover facility rental, landfill use, animal control, Port of Nome, and the like. The Council, in an amendment offered by Councilwoman Mary Knodel, saved consideration of the new Nome Rec Center fee schedule for additional discussion. The panel unanimously approved the other revisions proposed by the City's administration following a work session with the Council.

The proposed Rec Center fees charge $5 per day for youth and seniors, $6 for adults and $14 for families. On the other hand, Knodel pointed out, year memberships at $400 for youth/seniors, $500 for adults and $1200 for families come out to a daily cost of $1.10, $1.37 and $3.28.

"I'm not willing to allow people to go in and use it all day, take a sauna and a shower for $1.10," Knodel said. "It doesn't seem fair to those paying daily rates. Another Council member ob-

Another Council member observed that the 30 day membership at $55 for youth and seniors would allow miners to shower and sauna for $1.83 a day—pretty cheap.

Possibly the fees favor the higher income levels and tax the poor.

Santa by air, fuel by sea on Christmas Day

By Sandra L. Medearis

Santa crying, "now dash away, dash away, dash away, dash away all," may spot the Russian ice-breaking double-hulled fuel tanker T/V Renda scheduled to reach the icepack off Nome on Christmas Day.

If inspection hurdles and practical logistics succeed, including a fuel transfer at sea, the tanker will be carrying fuel to Nome to solve Sitnasuak Native Corp.'s shortage of retail fuel supplies resulting from barge line Delta Western's cancellation of a 1.6 million gallon shipment from a Dutch Harbor refinery.

Vitus Marine, an instate startup marine transportation company, is handling the logistics to get the Renda into Nome's waters with fuel purchased from a source in Japan.

Fuel consumers in Nome, already shelling out around $6 per gallon, are likely to feel the cost of meeting Sitnasuak's fuel shortage and extra transportation costs at the gas pumps and when the fuel hose goes into tanks to heat homes and businesses. According to current plans, the USCG S/V Healy, an icebreaker on scientific research assignment in the Bering Sea would, if its schedule allowed, rendezvous with the Renda at the edge of the ice in the Nome area. At that point, the USCG would inspect the Russian tanker. The S/V Healy would break ice to within a mile of the Port of Nome. From there, the Renda would crunch through on its own as close as possible to Nome's causeway by Dec. 28, according to USCG Lt. Veronica Colbath

That the Renda would tie up at the causeway is not likely, as the Renda's draft while empty, is almost 24 feet per company specifications. There is only 22 feet of water at the causeway's end. However, the Renda has two kilometers, or about a mile of hose for transferring fuel. The vessel was re-hulled in 2010 to meet a U.S. law requiring double-hulled tankers.

Last week's plan was for USCG inspectors to fly into Vladivostok where the Renda is moored to make physical inspection would occur at the edge of the ice, according to Colbath.

Kudos on your strong editorial chastising the USPS inspector general for misguided and misinformed conclusions about bypass mail.

Clearly someone did not do their homework. Yes, the USPS may have some of its numbers correct, but that ignores the challenges of Alaska logistics. I suggest that a phone call to Federal Express or UPS would have provided a lesson in logistics from a "lean and mean" company that makes its profits by knowing how to reliably move product from point A to point B at low cost and with accountability.

The point is that by-pass mail works and is a cost-saving win/win for both the Postal Service and customers to say nothing about decreased delivery times compared to traditional parcel post. You are correct — USPS leadership just doesn't get it.

I lived in Alaska only 10 years but even my first few years as a sourdough taught me important logistic lessons about living in the arctic.

(FYI, folks here in the "outside" don't have a clue what "by-pass mail" is or what it does.)

Lola and I wish for you a Merry Christmas! Sincerely.

Here Comes Another One

Hurricanes, blizzards, winter storm warnings - just another normal day in Nome. Seems as though one storm passes through and another winds up to test our endurance. We've been geographical explorers with the Great Wall of China on the East Beach, The Khyber Pass on K Street, the new Berlin Wall on First Avenue and Mt. McKinley behind the old Wein Building.

The high-pitched rumble of the state and city snow removal equipment is sweet music to our ears. While we are stoic about storms we may find ourselves surprised that family and friends who are not in Alaska phone to see if we are safe and sound and are not freezing to death from lack of fuel. Social networking and media hype has brought us into the spotlight. Does Alaska, with all her oil, really have to get fuel from Korea brought in on a Russian tanker? We just smile and try to rationalize why the rest of the nation is suddenly so concerned? We just do what we always do— dig in and hunker down. Nomeites were born with snow shovels in their hands. However, we can't be overconfident. Mother Nature is a formidable foe. We have to be prepared when we take her on and head out into the weather. We should be smart enough to stay put. If we have to go out we should have survival gear, leave travel plans with folks who know where we are going, and when we are expected to return.

When yet another back-to-back blizzard blasts our town we can feel secure and safe in our homes while the winds howl. We are confident the Nome Joint Utilities, Nome Public Works, Public Safety and snow removal crews are doing a fine job for us. So let it snow!

State opens disaster assistance hotline

By Diana Haecker

After the state declared the Nov. 8-9 west coast storm a disaster, the Alaska Division of Homeland Security and Emergency Management has opened a phone hotline to help individuals and families who suffered damages during the storm to file for state assistance.

Jeremy Zidek, spokesperson for the DHS & EM, said that instead of sending teams out to assist residents in the villages in person, the state set up the hotline. He said that individual staff is available to help with information how to apply for the State of Alaska "Individual and Family Grant Program." If homes were rendered inhabitable by the storm, people may also be eligible for a temporary housing program.

The state asks the applicants to document losses with inventory lists, photographs, receipts or other proof of ownership.

DHS&EM director John Madden

said that many individuals and families have sustained damages to their homes and personal property. He pledged that the Division of Homeland Security and Emergency Management would work with all available partners to ensure that recovery phase is swift and well-coor-

The number to call on weekdays is 1-855-445-7131 and the phones are staffed from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m.

NOTHING SAYS CHRISTMAS LIKE OLD ST. JOE'S — The original location for this grand structure was on Steadman Street shown here in 1907. In 1997, The City of Nome completed a $2 million refurbishment which included moving the former Catholic Church to its current home in Anvil City Square. 1997 was also the first year of the City's "Christmas Extravaganza."

NOAA delays ESA listing of ringed and bearded seals

The National Atmospheric and Oceanic Administration, responsible for the management of ice seals, said they extended the final decision on whether or not to list four subspecies of ringed and two distinct populations of bearded seals as threatened under the Endangered Species Act, for up to six months. The hold up, according to a NOAA press release is, that there is a "substantial disagreement concerning the Arctic ringed seals and the Beringia stock of bearded seals. The disagreement stems from the analysis of model projections of future sea ice habitat, in particular for Arctic ringed seals on-ice-snow cover, and related impacts. This disagreement extends to the magnitude and immediacy of the threats posed to these populations by the projected habitat changes, says the NOAA press release. NOAA also announced that it would review its own determination that ribbon seals don't warrant an ESA listing. A press release from NOAA said that new information has become available that includes data on ribbon seal movements and diving and that they will submit a 12-month finding. NOAA opened a 60-day public comment period to seek information on ribbon seals from the public, government agencies, Alaska Natives, the scientific community, industry and other interested parties.

ACMP initiative certified

Lt. Governor Mead Treadwell last week certified paperwork for an initiative to revive the Alaska Coastal Management program. This will bring the initiative closer to appearing on next year's ballot. The Alaska Sea Party spearheads the effort, led by initiative committee chair Juneau Mayor Bruce Botelho. The initiative must gather close to 26,000 signatures.

The Alaska Coastal Zone Management program allowed local governments to weigh in to proposals of coastal developments on federal lands. The Alaska legislature failed to extend the program and it died a prolonged death earlier this year, after a special session was called in to continue the program.

Yiki Kim pleads guilty

The 68-year old woman who fatally hit Jamison Thrun, 11, with her car, pleaded guilty to criminally negligent homicide in a Fairbanks court last week. Yiki Kim was driving at high speed through an intersection near University Park Elementary School and struck Jamison as he stood at the intersection waiting to cross. Jamison Thrun and his family had recently moved from Nome to Fairbanks. Kim's sentencing hearing is set for May in Fairbanks.

Oil and gas lease sale brings in millions for state and feds

The Bureau of Land Management received bids for its Dec. 7 lease sale in the National Petroleum Reserve-Alaska to the tune of $3 million. BLM offered 283 tracts comprising just over 3 million acres in the sale and received 20 bids for 17 tracts. BLM only offered acreage in or around acres that have previously been developed. The State of Alaska also offered a large selection of state lands for lease on the North Slope, netting almost $21 million in bids. Offers to develop oil wells on stateowned acreage on the North Slope, the North Slope Foothills and along the Beaufort Sea coastline near ANWR, resulted in preliminary bids on 256 tracts covering 616,064

The Parnell administration this year announced a "Secure Alaska's Future" strategy to achieve the one million barrel daily throughput goal within ten years. A press release out of the Department of Natural Resources office said that as part of the strategy, DNR has been promoting the North Slope lease sale and the positive attributes of the region's hydrocarbon basin to local, national, and international markets. DNR commissioner Dan Sullivan implicates that "this effort has included outreach to a wide array of stakeholders, including energy companies, investors, federal agencies, community groups and journalists." #### KUAC splits from AlaskaOne

KUAC TV, like its radio counterpart, will be a standalone station serving Interior Alaska. KUAC TV, along with KTOO in Juneau and KYUK in Bethel, has been part of AlaskaOne since 1995. At a meeting last month, the Alaska Public Broadcasting Service approved a motion to merge AlaskaOne's centralized feed with the feed from Anchorage-based KAKM, which is run by Alaska Public Telecommunications. KUAC's general manager Keith Martin cast the dissenting vote. As a result, KUAC will no longer be a member of the AlaskaOne consortium of stations beginning July 1, 2012. The change will not alter television pro-

USPS delays post office clo-

At press time on Tuesday morning, the United States Post Office said it delays closing or consolidating any post office or mail processing facility until May 15, 2012. Alaskan post offices on the chopping block were Douglas, Fort Wainwright, Eielson Air Force Base, Elmendorf Air Force Base and the Postal Store in downtown Anchorage. Thirty-one rural post offices, including Wales and White Mountain, originally on the list were removed from consideration.

Senator Lisa Murkowski said she hopes this delay would allow Congress to negotiate and pass a comprehensive, long-term solution for the postal service's financial stability. During the moratorium the Postal Service will continue to study the impact of proposed closures on service and costs and to solicit community input.

City Facilities to cost more to use

"If you can pay yearly, you can probably pay more. It is not the poor that are paying it [yearly pass]," Knodel added.

In business concerning the Norton Sound Economic Development Corp., managers of the areas fishery Community Development Quotient, the council discussed spending the 13th annual 2011 NSEDC Community Benefit Share, set again for the sixth year at the maximum amount of $100,000. Councilman Stan Andersen suggested the City divide the pie into pieces of $10,000 and have the public suggest projects. Chief John Papasodora suggested some of the money go into improvements at East End Park, to make a recreational area in addition to the park at Old St. Joe's on Bering Street.

Fortuitously, in the meeting packet was a letter submitted by Mike Brawner, Nome Public Schools superintendent in which he asked for money from Community Benefit Share for LED interior lighting at Nome Elementary School, a project that would cost $184,505 and save $72,063 annually. Bingo! The Council voted unanimously to put the money in the pot for this lighting project, starting with the gymnasium.

In other business, the council passed the following proposed ordinances from first reading to second reading and passage status at the next Council meeting:

· A measure to change the regular time of the Council meeting from 5:30 p.m. back to 7:00 p.m.

· A measure to lease space for Head Start in the City's Gold Hill Tutit Ininat Child Care Building to Kawerak, Inc. at a $4,878.63 per month payment, a Consumer Price Index increase of $50.75 per month.

 A measure to lease additional space in the GHTICCB for Uiviilat Play & Learn Center at $3468.33 per month, a CPI-driven increase of

• A measure adding a section to the City's ordinance dealing with the Museum and Library Commission, that comprises nine members appointed for overlapping terms. Two will be representatives of the Nome Eskimo Community and two other members would represent King Island Native Corp. The mayor would appoint the members of the commission, with any resident eligible to vote in the city eligible for commission appointment. The measure passed into second reading with Knodel and councilwoman Josie Stiles

• A resolution to authorize Josie Bahnke, city manager, to contract ECI/Hyer for master design of the Richard Foster Building was postponed pending more information provided to the Council on scope of the agreement and clarification of compensation.

In other business, the Council:

• Waived the fee ($1,350) for

Nome Volunteer Fire Department use of the Nome Rec Center for the Winter Carnival.

• Received information from Josie Bahnke, city manager, that an engineering firm estimated storm damage to Cape Nome Jetty at $500,000. Additional waterfront damage estimates brought the figure that the City will seek from state assistance to $579,592.85: Gold Avenue, $20,742; West F Street, $15294; Prospect Place/Belmont, $10,856; Block 142 drainage, $660; Causeway bridge abutment repairs, $4643; West Gold Dock repairs, $6144; City Dock repairs, $21,254. Cape Nome Jetty repairs, $500,000.

• Received word from Bahnke that the Rasmuson Foundation awarded a grant of $17,500 to update the library's media collection and equip-

• Voted to contribute $5,000 to the Iron Dog Race—$3,000 for second place and $2,000 for third. Andersen voted no, saying that Iditarod did not boost sales tax sufficiently to cover $5,000. Additionally, the award to Iron Dog would bring other requests for contributions that the City could not afford.

Received an account of expenses — $23,900 — for a trip to Norway by City officials: Mayor Denise Michels, $9,200; Port Director Jim West Jr., $7,600; utility manager John Handeland, $6,900. Michels informed of costs before the trip and explained that scheduling did not allow her to wrap part of the airfare in an official trip to Washington, D. C. That meant a nonrefundable ticket was lost and had to be repurchased.

During comments, Laura Samuelson, director of Carrie M. McLain Museum gave a report that detailed the effort to save the museum's irreplaceable exhibits from possible storm damage in November. Based on weather predictions, the museum staff and volunteers moved contents upstairs to the library before the winds hit.

Samuelson thanked volunteers Lori Head, Ann Whipple, Melanie Johnson, Charlene Saclamana Betty Davenport and Sister Alice Sullivan who—on short notice—"helped us carefully wrap and box about 800 irreplaceable objects from 13 display cases. It took nine people times six hours to make the move, or 54 hours. The day before, four people times six hours or 28 hours to move other items to our Sitnasuak storage, coming to 82 "man" hours in two days.'

It took museum staff almost three weeks to put the exhibits back in

"We are looking forward to moving to higher ground," Samuelson

The museum will have a new home in the new Richard Foster Building soon to take shape under the architect's pen

Samuelson announced that the museum has been awarded with recognition by Alaska Magazine in its selection of "10 Must-See Museums" in Alaska.

Finally during Council comments, Knodel's list of questions for Bahnke asked whether the City would be reimbursed for the time of the public works staff and portmaster, already off for the season and now returned at hourly consultant rates for the delivery of fuel by Russian tanker-ice breaker to the Sitnasuak Native Corp. tank farm. A failed delivery by Delta Western has left Sitnasuak with a fuel shortage that will affect Nome consumers if Sitnasuak has to pay much more for transport by icebreaker or by air cargo.

"It wasn't our mistake and we are spending considerable," Knodel said. 'Now they are adding heating fuel," she said, alluding to the information that Sitnasuak has ample heating fuel on offer, but is loading more on the tanker.

"It is not our fault, but indirectly we [City staff] need to be involved, Bahnke said.

Michels and Bahnke attended the meeting by telephone as they are vacationing in Hawaii, but attending daily teleconferences with all concerned parties including the USCG during Sitnasuak's fuel crisis.

DIGGING OUT — After the three-in-a-row blizzard week, the local DOT crew continued to dig out Front Street on Monday morning.

port state control inspection on the vessel to ensure it is in compliance with U.S. laws and regulations, she said. "We're there to make sure the tanker vessels meets specific regulations and for minimizing any safety, security or environmental threats.

"We're talking every day with the City and our industry partners, everybody that has a vested interest. We're reviewing every option to work as a collaborative team to find a solution... and mitigate any type of risk," Colbath said.

Jason Evans, Sitnasuak board chair who attends the meetings also, said Monday that plans had also changed from using a fuel source in South Korea to using a source in Japan. The Renda would not enter a Japanese port but would take on fuel in a mid-ocean transfer operation from a Japanese barge. The fuel supplier in South Korea serves a California market with fuel tailored to meet low emissions standards and not cold weather. The need for quick delivery did not allow time for the Korean Company to modify fuel for cold weather use suitable to Nome, according to Evans. On the other hand, a refinery in Japan had fuel to satisfy requirements, for example, a lowered pour point for use in arctic weather to allow fuel to flow without gelling and ignite at low temperatures, he said.

Evans said multiple variables held him back from saying how much Sitnasuak's fuel vendor, Bonanza Fuel, would have to increase its prices per gallon to cover the added cost of fuel delivery by icebreaker.

For a large part, "it depends on whether Delta Western will live up to its contractual obligation so we can get fuel at the set amount in the contract," Evans said. Compensation for the difference in the price of the failed shipment from Dutch Harbor and the price of obtaining and transporting fuel from Japan was still under negotiation, he said. Additionally, the price of fuel on the day of loading, Dec. 14, would figure into the retail cost.

Tax dollars will pay for port security, public works employees and a harbormaster on off-season duty to assist planning and execution of the fuel transfer at an hourly rate. If the fuel comes across the port headers, the Port of Nome will collect a cost of $0.03 per gallon from Sitnasuak, according to port tariff, but will not collect dockage.

According to plan, the 371-foot Renda will bring unleaded gasoline, low sulfur diesel for vehicles and heating fuel totaling 1.5 million gallons. Sitnasuak already has sufficient heating fuel on hand for winter sales. according to Evans.

Although the failed barge delivery may have become Nome's emergency, with Nome's city manager, Josie Bahnke reporting to the Nome Common Council concerning logistics to "bring in our winter fuel supsubsidiary, Sitnasuak's Bonanza Fuel, is not the sole vendor in Nome. Crowley Fuel Distribution has a Nome outlet for vehicle gasoline and heating fuels. The company also sells iet fuel. Earlier this month. Bob Cox, vice president of sales and distribution, said Crowley had enough fuel for its retail needs and could spare 300,000 gallons from its surplus in Nome to sell to Sitnasuak and had more surplus fuel in Kotzebue for Sitnasuak to transport by tanker airplane for Sitnasuak's Bonanza Fuel operation. Evans said that with 300,000 gallons purchased from Crowley, he anticipated needing to fly or tanker in 500,000 additional gallons. Last week, Sitnasuak announced the contract with Vitus Marine to bring in fuel using the Renda.

Coffee circles have been conjecturing on how Crowley, a Bonanza competitor, would play its hand in the game of supply and demand when Bonanza raised fuel prices or its Russian tanker did not arrive and winter cold forced wallets to open wide to subsidize air transport. Cox did not immediately return phone calls Monday.

City of Nome would not incur costs for USCG participation in the tanker delivery and that of other government agencies, Bahnke told Nome Common Council at its regular meeting Monday, because it would be a government-to-government transaction. Both Bahnke and Mayor Denise Michels attended the Council meeting by telephone Monday, as they were vacationing in Looking at air cargo costs, Evans has said freight could add three to four dollars a gallon. The cost of bringing in fuel by tanker would halve that extra cost, he said.

In Nome, already under siege from energy costs 275 percent higher than elsewhere, fuel consumers fear fuel costs in the ozone.

'You have to be rich to live here in Nome," said Jerome Saclamana, leaving shortly to take up a less expensive life in Anchorage.

Meanwhile, rumors circulated that Norton Sound Economic Development Corp. would once again distribute assistance to households to help offset high energy prices.

Steller sea lions appear in unusual locations, branded animals show up on St. Lawrence Island in winter

By Diana Haecker

Observations from hunters in Gambell are rocking the scientific world as new information has been reported from St. Lawrence Island: Steller sea lions are now staying in the northern Bering Sea into late November and December and some animals with brands on their sides have been tracked traveling thousands of miles to Bering Sea waters - from as far away as southeast Alaska.

While it is not unusual that they do travel north, it is unusual that they show up at new haulout spots and at times when scientists believed they would be further south.

A few years ago, Gambell residents were surprised by a large amount of Steller sea lions — about 2,000 of them — hauled out in the Sivuonok area northwest of Gambell in late fall. The animals appeared in such numbers and were feeding heavily such that their waste turned the near shore waters brown and residents wondered if sea lion's feces could contaminate local beachcast subsistence foods.

Gambell residents called the Nome office of the Alaska Department of Fish and Game and informed marine mammal staff biologist Gay Sheffield about the unusual occurrence. (Sheffield is now with the UAF Marine Advisory Program and still involved in the scientific data gathering regarding the Steller sea lions.)

Sheffield relayed the news to Lauri Jemison, with the ADF&G Sea Lion Program in Juneau. Surprised by the observations of the Gambell hunters and the fact that branded animals were sighted, Jemison managed to get a Coastal Impact Assistance program grant to further study the phenomena.

Not much is known about the lives of Steller sea lions. Migration patterns are not well understood and a map of the Sea Grant program indeed shows their summer range up to Little Diomede, but here they are: sighted in winter as far north as sitting on an ice floe near Little Diomede and hauling out north of Gambell. "It's not news that Steller sea lions frequent St. Lawrence Island," said Sheffield, "but what is unusual is that they choose to show up at a new location, north of their usual southern summer haulouts, and during an unusual season, November and December."

Steller sea lions have been scientifically documented since the 1950s in this region. The western stock of Steller sea lions, those born west of an imaginary 144° longitude line, is listed as an endangered species. Their eastern counterparts, born east of 144° longitude, are listed as threatened, but are thought to be recovering. Since they are listed under the Endangered Species Act, two of the western stock's haulout locations at south Punuk Islands and Southeast Cape of St. Lawrence Island are federally designated critical habitat on St. Lawrence Island. beluga, that herded large numbers of arctic cod to feed on. Thousands of

So what about the branded sea lions? The movements of sea lions are difficult to follow and an international team of researchers devised a long standing program to hot brand sea lion pups when they are one month old at their birthplace rookeries in the Aleutian Islands, Southeast Alaska, Oregon, California and Russia. In the summer, scientists return to the rookeries, serving both as birthing and breeding grounds, where they search for and photodocument branded animals to track their movements.

So far, those field studies have only been conducted in the summer. The common hypothesis was that breeding bulls have high fidelity to their birth territory and that they don't stray far. This assumption was upset when in December 2010 Sheffield and Jemison observed 11 branded sea lions near Sivuonok from five different birth sites spanning the North Pacific Ocean from the Russian Aleutian Medny Island to Lowrie Island in the southeastern Gulf of Alaska. They photodocumented animals from both western and eastern stock. "We didn't expect to see any brands, in fact, you're lucky if you see just one branded animal," Sheffield said. "But we ended up positively photo documenting nine animals out of the eleven we sighted."

The biologists didn't observe any adult females. When they went back to the files that list where the branded animals were born, they were in for another surprise. A Steller sea lion with the brand F1124 was born in Lowrie Island in the southeastern Gulf of Alaska. The ten-yearold bull took the prize for being the farthest traveled Steller sea lion ever documented as he covered 2,000 miles from his birth location on Lowrie Island during 2001 to December 2010, showing up at St. Lawrence Island. One bull sea lion with the brand H183 was seen defending a territory in southeast Alaska during July 2010 - by December 2010 he was photographed near Gambell. This long distance traveler was photographed in July 2011 having returned to southeast Alaska. This is the first documentation of a round trip from southeast Alaska to the Bering Sea and back again, Sheffield noted. Other branded sea lions seen near Gambell during 2010 had been sighted during the 2010 summer as breeding bulls in their birth territories, nearly 2,000 miles south of St. Lawrence Island. Two branded animals originated from Medny Island on the Russian Aleutians and five branded sea lions were from Ugamak Island on the Aleutians.

During December 2010 the sea lions seemed to have been part of a large feeding group of marine mammals, that included gray whales and arctic cod to feed on. Thousands of arctic cod were beached onshore near Gambell as a result. The Evergreen Air helicopter pilot en route to Little Diomede Island on the weekly mail run during the middle of December 2010 reported 20 Steller sea lions drifting on an ice floe about one mile south of the island. An additional indication of how the northern waters in the Bering Strait are changing is mentioned in Sheffield and Jemison's report. "Two experienced hunters [from Gambell], standing on shore, watched a large sea lion frantically swimming toward the beach. The sea lion was then tossed upward and bit on the fore flipper by a shark, both then disappeared under water," reads the report. Imagine the size of the shark, managing to chase a grown sea lion down and tossing the bull — an approximately 1,000 pound animal—out of the water.

Questions that the biologists are now pondering include why Steller sea lions from the eastern stock – the stock that is supposed to be recovering and gaining in population, hence not having any food shortage – are moving north and west of their "usual" roaming area. What other species are either leading or following these big marine mammals? The biologists are set on learning more about how sea lions are now using the Bering Strait region. Sheffield stresses that it was the diligence of local hunters on St. Lawrence Island alerting the researchers to this new information and that without sharing their observations none of new information would be known or documented. She encourages coastal residents and hunters to keep reporting occurrences that seem new or out of the ordinary. "The information coming in from our coastal communities helps add pieces to the puzzle of how the northern marine environment is changing and how animals, and, ultimately, we will adapt to those changes," Sheffield said.

Wolfpack and Lynx head to Anchorage

By Jeff Erickson, activities director BSSD

Mixed 6 volleyball has been around northwest Alaska for almost three decades, introduced to allow schools with small student enrollments a chance to participate in team sports. It grabbed hold in communities like Teller, Golovin and White Mountain and became a mainstay of entertainment and competition. Only in the last 10 years has it been adopted by larger sites as a competitive sport and now it securely sits as the second most popular sport, in terms of participation, in the Bering Strait School District.

The Western Conference tournament was held in Teller, December 1-3. With 11 of the 15 BSSD schools in attendance, it was the largest tournament in the history of the conference. Additionally, there was a change in the recent history of the seeds at the event. For many years Unalakleet and Golovin have assumed the top two spots, but a resurgence from a historically powerful volleyball school, White Mountain, nabbed them the second seed, which pushed Golovin into the same side of the bracket with the top-seeded Wolfpack from Unalakleet.

Matches ran from morning to night with the seeding proving correct until late Saturday when, after a 3 set defeat to Unalakleet, the Golovin Lynx began their climb back to the second place match. With wins of Teller, Elim and finally White Mountain on Saturday, the Lynx secured their place at the State tournament. Unalakleet had already defeated White Mountain in straight sets in the Championship match, so, as it has been the past six years, the Wolfpack and Lynx had their tickets punched for Anchorage.

The state bracket seemed odd this year. Nowhere was there a mention of the Pt. Hope Harpooners — the three-time defending champions, so it felt like the tournament was open to everyone. Unalakleet and Golovin both felt like this might be the year for an all-BSSD state final and the teams took to the court on Thursday, December 8, with that intention. Unalakleet took the court first against the Marshall Mustangs and quickly asserted themselves as tournament contenders with a bruising straight set victory, which pushed them into the semi-finals. Senior All-State hitter Donald Erickson and fellow All-Stater Stuart Towarak dominated the net and overall play. Golovin was not so lucky as they suffered a hardfought defeat to the Noatak Lynx in a match that went to 5 sets.

The semi-final felt like a championship match to the Wolfpack. With state seeding based on a rotation, often two of the best teams can meet in the semis, instead of the championship due to this process and the Glacier View Wolverines appeared to be a formidable foe. This played out in the match, which was hard-fought to the end. Unalakleet came back in the first set from a seemingly insurmountable 20-11 score to win and competed until the very end...but could not turn away the Wolverines. With the loss the Wolfpack's championship hopes were dashed but they held their heads high in defeat and put their focus on the final match of the year for third place.

Golovin bounced back from the first round disappointment with a 3-0 victory over Scammon Bay and looked much more like the quality squad they are.

On the final day of the state tournament final placements were settled. Golovin had an early face-off with the Noorvik Bears and could not hold back the barrage of strong serves and spikes of their opponent's hitter, Danny Wells. His jump serve was intimidating and the Bears prevailed 3 sets to 1. Unalakleet rebounded in their match with the Aniak Halfbreeds and dominated the entire match. The match was highlighted by quality play by all three of the graduating seniors for the Wolfpack: Donald Erickson, Chastity Adams and Deion Foote. The win netted the team from Unalakleet third place in State.

Other awards went to Golovin's John Peterson, who was selected for the All-Tournament team, Unalakleet won the team Academic Award and Unalakleet's Jennie Katchatag received the Defensive Specialist Award.

Christmas Extravaganza brings holiday spirit to Nome

Howling winds and tons of snow delayed old Saint Nicholas' appearance in Nome. The annual City of Nome Christmas Extravaganza had to be postponed for a day, on account of Wednesday's record-breaking blizzard. On Thursday, however, the weather calmed down and granted passage to Santa Claus, who appeared as scheduled as the guest of honor after an evening of local entertainment at Old St. Joe's Hall.

Organizer Laura Samuelson

The lights decorating a huge Christmas tree were ceremonially lighted and Beneville led the audience in singing "There is no place like Nome for the holidays." Old St. Joe's was packed with people and kids wearing their finest Christmas

The program continued with

Harmony Choir conducted by Angela Hansen and a chime performance led by Shoni Evans. Peter Bente delighted the crowds with a song from the Old World -including a Latin refrain - about Christmas feasts in hunter circles that consist of wild boar instead of turkey.

The musical delight was brought to a grand finale with cheerful songs performed by "A box of candles" – Phillip Hofstetter and his wife Sarah Hanson Hofstetter, Alex Hutson, Dave Coler, Laura Davis Collins, Jamie Saghafi and Nikki Scherer.

To the delight of all the children,

Santa Claus did finally appear, bringing with him a big bag full of candy

NEWT WATCHING- Nine Kawerak Headstart students were drawn to observe their new classmates - two newts in an aquarium.

Newts bring biology lessons into classrooms

By Diana Haecker

Kawerak Headstart has two new teachers. They are four-legged, but live in water. At one point, they had gills, but now they breathe with lungs. They are cute, yet slippery. The creatures are called newts alpine newts to be exact - and biologist Claudia Ihl's passion for these critters brought them into the threeand four-year olds classroom at Kawerak Headstart.

"Aquariums are wonderful tools to introduce children to biology," Ihl said. She raises newts as a hobby and donated two of the amphibians to the Kawerak Headstart program. One wouldn't find a newt in these latitudes, which makes it all the more exciting for the children to see. Newts, Ihl explained, are amphibians that hatch from eggs, turn into larvae with gills and resemble tadpoles. They are going through a metamorphosis, grow lungs, breathe, crawl on terra firma and become land animals. Ihl said that her newts have been with her for 14 years and that the animals can live to be 30 years old.

The idea of the newt aquarium is to pique the children's curiosity about the natural world. And it worked. Teacher Janet Balice said that the children soaked up Ihl's introduction to the newts and followed the biologist around like puppies. Two students were a bit apprehensive and scared at first, but then came around and took a peek, Balice said.

Ihl added that all kids appeared fascinated and that she is visiting the classroom once a week to feed the newts and to give out tidbits of kidfriendly biology lessons. Like: What do they eat? Earthworms, which elicited a reaction of "uh, yucky." But again, the kids that found earthworms slightly gross, worked up the courage to come around, take another look and then even asked if they could touch a worm.

That's where scientists come from," said an excited teacher Balice. "This is how the kids learn how nature works and how to respect the environment," she said. Balice explained that simple lessons like what they eat and how to keep their aguarium clean plants the seeds for the idea that a clean environment is a healthy environment.

Ihl, a professor at Northwest Campus in Nome, said that her career as a biologist started in a local pond in her native Germany. As a kindergartener, she said, she went missing for a day and was found playing joyfully in the pond, chasing newts. She said she would like to instill the notion in kids that a handful of soil is not "yucky" dirt, but is full of life with little creepy crawlers, worms and other earth inhabitants that are needed in the web of life on this planet.

Ihl said she plans to set up an aquarium at a middle-school class at Nome-Beltz High School. "Aquariums, in general, make great classroom tools," Ihl said. She said she hopes to teach more complex topics like water chemistry. Whether teaching the basics or more advanced lessons, it's to serve the same purpose: to impart the sense of wonder and how science can help students understand the complex web of nature.

Alice Jane Osborne

Alice Jane Osborne died peacefully in Olympia, Washington on December 6, at the age of 94. She was born in Minot, North Dakota to Frank and Mary Julianna Yeagle on

Alice Jane Osborne

July 22, 1917. She grew up and attended school in the Dakotas, receiving a degree in Classics from Dakota Wesleyan University in 1939. Alice was adventurous: when she finished college, she applied for teaching jobs in Alaska and Saudi Arabia. Alaska offered her a job, and so she flew to Nome, Alaska in 1942 under wartime conditions. She met her husband-to-be Gordon Osborne there, but they weren't allowed to marry until the war ended. She and Oz made homes in Nome, Kotzebue, Barrow, Fairbanks and Delta Junction over their years together in Alaska.

Alice taught school from elementary to high school but primarily taught business, English, and Latin. Once she and Oz moved to Fairbanks, she also became the advisor for Lathrop High School's newspaper, The Paystreak and served as Lathrop's English department head when Lathrop and West Valley split. Alice also briefly wrote a column on parenting for the Fairbanks paper, the Daily News-Miner. Once she and Oz retired, they moved to Sequim, Alice loved gardening, and created beautiful yards in her homes in Washington. She continued her love of writing as well; she was a member of Alaska Press Women and the National Federation of Press Women, she wrote a column for the Peninsula Daily News, she belonged to several writing groups, and she published a book about her adventures in Alaska, Alice Osborne's Alaska. Alice's fondness for travel to distant places led her on trips to Australia and New Zealand, Germany, Italy and Greece. She also volunteered for the Humane Society and tutored for the Sequim schools.

Oz died in 1985, and Alice moved to Panorama City to be near family. She volunteered with their annual garden show and helped produce their newsletter. After a series of heart attacks, she moved to Mother Joseph Care Center, where she lived until her death. She is survived by her daughter Sandra Madsen and her grandchildren Bjorn and Leif.

A memorial service will be held at Mother Joseph Care Center on Saturday, December 17, 2011 at 2:00 p.m. Please leave memories and condolences at www.FuneralAlternatives.com. Arrangements are with Funeral Alternatives of Washington, Tumwater, 360-753-1065.

her ancestors on December 2, 2011. Deanna, descendent of the King Island Native Community, was born, raised, and resided in Oregon. She is survived by her supportive and loving family, son Edward Tattayuna Kingston, parents Olga Muktoyuk Kingston and Dalena SpiritSong Kingston, sister Rena Seunninga, brother-in-law Henk Seunninga, niece Kenna and nephew Connor Ryan Seunninga, brothers Kevin and A. Scott Kingston and numerous family in Nome, Anchorage, Fairbanks and the greater Alaska region.

Deanna often commented that she felt she was born an anthropologist. Her love for peoples, cultures, stories and legends carried her to many parts of the world but always brought her home. Dr.

Kingston received her BS in Science Communications from the University of Portland in 1986, an MAIS in Cultural Anthropology from Oregon State University in 1993 and her PhD in Anthropology from the University of Alaska Fairbanks in 1999. In 2000, Dr. Kingston began her journey as a professor of anthropology at Oregon State University. An unfailing supporter of students of color, she worked tirelessly with Native students, advising and co-advising many Native graduate students over her 10 plus years at Oregon State University. Working as an advisor for the Native American Longhouse, she supported Native students and faculty alike at OSU, and served as one of the finest role models of a colleague, friend, mentor, and scholar.

Deanna had many great accomplishments through her work, her son and family, and her open candor during her long battle with cancer. She served on the National Science Foundation's Office of Polar Programs Advisory Committee and also on the SEARCH (Study for Environmental Arctic Change) Responding to Change Panel. Dr. Kingston participated in numerous workshops and conferences including "Designing an Arctic Observing Network" in Copenhagen, Denmark, an international conference on indigenous knowledge at Pennsylvania State University and a workshop at the International Arctic Social Science Association meeting, sponsored in part by the Alaska Native Science Commission, on collaborating with Arctic communities

She was cognizant of efforts both in the circumpolar Arctic and in the Pacific Northwest to consult, respect, and collaborate with Native American/indigenous communities, particularly when it comes to their knowledge of the environment. Deanna's inspirational thoughts and ideas will be kept alive in the numerous articles and publications she wrote and in the legacy of the students she advised.

Her unerring commitment to the betterment of others and her community were demonstrated in her participation in a myriad of organizations such as the International Arctic Social Science Association, Alaska Anthropology Association, the Arctic Institute of North America and the Planning Committee for the International Conference on Indigenous Placenames, Guovdageiadnu, Norway, September 2010.

In 2003 she received a National Science Foundation grant to document and compare scientific knowledge with traditional ecological knowledge of King Island, Alaska. Thanks to her work through this grant, many King Island peoples were able to return to King Island and share their knowledge and wisdom with the younger King Islanders. This work culminated in one of her proudest accomplishments, the King Island Placenames Project interactive website that documents the cultural geography, biogeography and traditional ecological knowledge of King Island (http://www.kingislandplacename.co

Devoted to furthering numerous causes and helping others along their paths, Deanna kept a long-running, open, intimate diary of her journey (deeupdates.blogspot.com) that was a source of inspiration and healing for her, her friends and families, and countless others living with or affected by the disease. Despite the often heavy topics of her blog posts, Deanna strove to find the humor and insight in every situation and communicate both to others. Her courageous and kind spirit will forever be missed and remembered.

About her next voyage, Deanna wrote on her blog, "don't be sad, be happy for my passing 'cause I'm going on a wonderful journey. I'm not sure where, but if you miss me, just think about me and I'll be there— wrapping you with my spirit, keeping you comfortable, wishing

FDA advisors warn birth control pill increases risk for blood clots

Bob Lawrence, MD Alaska Family Doctor

Hormonal contraceptives, commonly called birth control pills, made news last week after an FDA advisory board released a report on whether several forms of the medication should be labeled as safe for general use.

The FDA a dvisory committee recommendations are important, not only for women hoping to avoid pregnancy, but for the

to treat severe acne, dysfunctional uterine bleeding, or premenstrual dysphoric disorder (monthly physical or emotional problems preceding a menstrual period).

The FDA advisors are concerned about the risk of blood clots in people using hormonal birth control.

ALASKA

Hormonal contraceptives are known to increase a person's risk of life-threatening blood clots, called venous thromboe mbolism (VTE). The risk is even higher for people taking a newer hormone called drospirenone found in birth control pills like Yaz or Yasmine. While a blood clot forming in a non-pregnant, overall healthy young woman is a rare event, when clots do occur, studies show that 90 percent of all events are associated with hormone contraceptive use.

Furthermore, smoking, obesity, and diabetes increase a person's risk of an adverse cardiovascular event while taking hormonal contraceptives.

Smoking is especially risky when taking hormone therapy. Eighty to ninety-seven percent of fatal heart attacks and strokes in women under age 44 are associated with a combination of hormone therapy and tobacco use. For this reason, many doctors will not prescribe hormonal contraceptives to women who smoke.

Venous thromboemolisms (VTE) associated with hormonal contraceptives tend to form in the deep veins of the legs often causing pain and swelling of the affected limb. Clots in the leg can break free and become lodged again in the lung. A sudden clot in the lung, called a pulmonary embolism, causes chest pain and shortness of breath, or a life-threatening inability to get oxygen to the bloodstream.

After reviewing available studies, the FDA's Advisory Committee for Reproductive Health Drugs and Drug Safety and Risk Management recognized the increased risk of VTE, but the committee voted to recommend that the FDA allow hormonal medications, like drospirenone-containing pills or the hormonal patch, to be prescribed stating that the benefits of the medication outweigh the risks.

The advisory panel also recommended that these hormonal contraceptives should include a stern warning regarding the increased risk of a life-threatening venous thromboembolism.

Women prescribed hormonal contraceptives, including the hormones contained in a birth control pill, a patch, an injection, an intrauterine device, or vaginal ring, should speak with their physicians regarding the risks and benefits of hormone therapy.

Patients with known cardiovascular disease or conditions that increase the risk of a blood clot, or venous thromboemolism (VTE), should not use any form of hormonal contraceptive. Conditions that increase a person's risk of VTE include smoking, cancer, recent major surgery, extensive airline travel, poorly controlled diabetes mellitus, clotting disorders, or a personal or family history of blood clots in the past.

Savoonga power outages fixed

By Diana Haecker

Savoonga residents experienced power failures, said Savoonga Mayor Myron Kingeekuk. He reported on Friday that different parts of the city are affected.

On Thursday around 4 a.m., the power went out for a section of town, said Kingeekuk. About 70 residences didn't have electricity for a few hours and on Friday afternoon some homes, the post office and the public safety building were without

"We've been going on and off of power for a while now," said Kingeekuk. After a winter storm that paralyzed the region and Nome for the better part of Wednesday and Thursday, a lineman made it out to Savoonga on Friday morning and began to search for the problem.

Alaska Village Electrical Cooperative Executive Director Meera

Kohler said that the lineman was able to replace a transformer and to restore the power to the community. "Originally there were 70 services out for a few hours, then 40 and then we isolated the problem to one transformer and replaced it," said Kohler. She explained that bad weather probably played a role insofar as winds caused lines to slap together, causing brown-outs that eventually lead to the transformer failure. As of Monday, power has been completely restored.

Nome birders set for Christmas Bird Count

This is a reminder to birders in Nome, Alaska that the Christmas Bird Count is on Saturday, December 17. Alternate date is Sunday, December 18.

Bird species are counted on the Count Day. Any bird species sighted 3 days before and 3 days after the Count Day are eligible to be listed with the Nome CBC, so be watching for birdlife for a full week, Dec 14-20.

The count circle extends as far as: Dexter (Kougarok Road), Glacier Creek bridge (New Glacier Creek Road), Sunset Mine area (Teller Road), and almost to Hastings Creek (Council Road). Observations by vehicle, snowmachine, foot, ski, or dog team are welcome. Please contact me if you are interested in counting birds so there is good coverage of roads, trails, and areas.

For those interested in a group vehicle departure on Count Day beginning about 11:00 AM, please meet at the Nome Visitor Center. At the end of the count we can plan a summary (with food) at Airport Pizza.

Feeder watches, trail travel (by any method), or vehicle coverage is needed. Be sure to record bird species and number of individuals, total time and distance traveled during observations.

Please reply so that I know you will/will not be able to count birds. Also, I will need to update the 'participant list' that is submitted with count data, so your reply is helpful. $5.00 fee covers the cost of publishing the results in American Birds.

building up snowdrifts around houses, on roads and made driving virtually impossible.

Nome Public Schools scheduled a make-up day, but canceled it due to a few Christmas programs that were supposed to happen that day. Cars got stuck on main roads as drifts built fast and disappeared into the overall whiteness of it all. In front of Hanson's parked cars were snowed in and got stuck, people reverted to walking home, bracing against the wind.

The Weather Service reports that Saturday broke yet another record with a snowfall of 4.5 inches, beating the 2007 record of 4.1 inches.

The month's total as of press time on Monday is 23.5 inches of snowfall, on track to beat the all time precipitation record for December of 31 inches. Sunday, although still windy, saw only a snowfall accumulation of one tenth of an inch. While the first two storms this week were warm and saw temperatures around the freezing point, the third storm saw cooler temperatures in the teens.

As of Monday, Public Works and DOT were still busy clearing the roads. The snow was piled up in the middle of the road and then blown into trucks, which hauled truckloads of snow to the city snow dump.

The DOT crew had six people working the roads and six men at the airport. The airport was closed Saturday afternoon until 5 a.m. on Sunday. DOT spokeswoman Meadow Bailey said that DOT crew worked from about 2 a.m. when the storm calmed down until the airport reopened.

Unqualified bidders hold up DNR offshore lease sale

By Diana Haecker

Two months after the Department of Natural Resources offered tracts for lease in a rare offshore lease sale in Nome, DNR officials are still finalizing the list of successful bidders. To be more concrete, 12 out of the 53 near shore tracts that were sold via outcry auction are at the center of dispute.

The highest bidders for those tracts, Mike Benchoff and Scott Meisterheim, did not complete their qualification statements prior to the lease sale when it was held in Nome's Old St. Joe's Hall on September 28. Benchoff was the highest bidder on 10 near shore tracts, Meisterheim on two tracts.

After DNR's Kerwin Krause worked through the massive amounts of paperwork generated by the auction, he discovered that the qualifying statements for several bidders were missing. What to do?

Given that the auction was an extraordinary event that came with its own complications, the case was presented to Brent Goodrum, the director of the DNR Division of Mining, Land and Water, who determined that Meisterheim and Benchoff were to be rejected from the lease sale.

However, there they got a second chance.

Krause said that he notified the bidders with missing or incomplete qualification statements and gave them 10 days to file the correct paperwork. "And they did," said Krause.

However, the decision was communicated to all the bidders and Norm Stiles appealed. "Norm Stiles thought there was sufficient notice and information provided prior to the lease sale," Krause said. "He was of the opinion that anybody should've known that they had to submit a qualification statement," said Krause.

Stiles' appeal is going to be considered by the Commissioner of DNR, Dan Sullivan, and if he agrees with appeal it would disqualify Meisterheim and Benchoff from the lease sale. Krause said that there were other miners who didn't submit complete qualification statements, but those are inconsequential because they didn't end up being among the top three bidders for any tracts.

Krause said he expects the appeal to be handled no later than February 2012. "There really is no time line, but it has been prioritized so that the issue can get resolved," Krause said.

Other tracts that were not hampered by sloppy paperwork submit-

Health Aide strike averted

A Community Health Aide strike beginning Monday, Dec. 19 was averted when Norton Sound Health Corporation's leadership met with health aides on Friday afternoon and munities.

In a proclamation sent to NSHC chairperson Emily Hughes and the entire board of directors as well as to CEO Deven Parlikar, the Community Health Aide Association threatened to strike because NSHC's Community Services "has made employment conditions intolerable." The proclamation said that health aides were forced to resign or have been terminated and that 48 health aides – constituting 70 percent of the health aide work force in the region—have been fired or quit in the 18 months that Barbara Collins has been the director of Village Health Services.

The health aides laid the blame squarely on Collins and demanded that she be immediately removed from any supervisory position within Community Health Services. The Health Aide Association also demanded to remove Collins' supervisor, the corporate officer of Community Health Services. Further, the health aides' proclamation demands to either remove the director of Human Resources or do away with the policy of making health aides take flex leave to recuperate

Russian fuel tanker on the horizon for end of month

By Sandra L. Medearis

All systems remained go Monday for using a 371-foot Russian tanker for getting part of Nome's winter fuel supply through the ice clad Port of Nome and into the Bonanza Fuel storage tank farm. Monday the ice-class tanker was taking on a million gallons of #1 diesel heating fuel at a fuel dock in Yosu, South Korea and expected to finish that job Tuesday. From Korea the schedule called for the tanker vessel Renda to travel north to pick up gasoline off Japan along the way to Alaska waters. The load of fuel was to total 1.5 million gallons gallons.

Logistics and coordination of inspecting agencies has pushed back the tanker's arrival for a week. Preliminary plans called for the tanker to arrive at the edge of the ice pack off Nome on Christmas Day, pause for a U.S. Coast Guard port state inspection go-over and then break through 300 miles of ice with assistance from the USCG icebreaker Healy to as close to Port of Nome as her draught would allow.

Without major storm interference, arrival at the ice's edge would be at month's end, Mark Smith of Vitus Marine said.

Sitnasuak Native Corp., parent company of Bonanza Fuel, has contracted the Alaska company Vitus Marine to deliver fuel from Asia to Nome using an ice-class double-hulled tanker cruising under a Russian flag and based in Vladivostok. Delivery of 1.6 gallons of assorted fuels by another barge company under contract did not arrive in time to beat the winter ice into port.

The T/V Renda is carrying a mile of hose with which to connect to port headers for the fuel flow. Hose for marine transfers of fuel is typically light enough to be managed with manpower alone, according to Smith. The date of arrival for inspections has been pushed back to allow juggling of many variables and clearances necessary from mul-

Bah Humbug CongressIn Washington, DC the cast of characters includes Frosty the Snowman, the Grinch and Ebenezer Scrooge. It's hard to decide whether to laugh or cry. Republican Candidates debates are like eggnog gone bad. Will the lowa Caucus ever get here? And who really cares? One candidate is dumber than the next. Can't the Republicans find anyone who is a statesman with some common sense or at least half a brain? Can't the Christian right wing find a candidate without a sordid personal history? What goes around comes around. It's cheap entertainment and the stupidity and animosity are worse than the dumbest TV reality show.

The Congress of the United States is an embarrassment. Their actions are almost tantamount to treason. Why did the newly elected Tea Party Republicans take an oath or pledge administered by a bunch of private, well-funded ultra rich ultra conservatives? The oath was to not raise taxes on the rich. The reward was money for their campaign funds. This type of behavior is not acceptable. It is just not right. This type of special influence peddling needs to be stopped and the perpetrators put in jail. Does anyone have enough guts to put an end to the obstructionist process? Does Ebenezer Scrooge walk the halls of Congress? Is the Ghost of Christmas Past rattling his chains on Capitol Hill? Attempts to help the poor, the sick and the less fortunate don't amount to a lump of coal. Sneaky little Grinch tricks tear the heart out of progressive legislation. Pipeline skunk works are stuck in the chimney of payroll tax legislation. Collaboration and cooperation are scoffed and the narrow-minded unable-to-think-forthemselves obstructionists continue to not tax the poor of millionaires and wealthy corporations who don't reinvest in America. They take their profits overseas and create jobs in China. What's wrong with this picture? Doesn't that just frost the mistletoe?

It's hard to imagine how the US Congress got to be so unprofessional. It seems they just want to do everything possible to destroy and negate legislation that protects the health and well being of our people. They do their best to shield the moneymen and to heck with the citizens who may have been gullible enough to elect them. Now it's the voters' turn to say, "Dash away, dash away, dash away all." — N.L.M.-

By Senator Donald Olson. 27th Alaska Legislature, District T

My family and I would like to wish you a very Merry Christmas and Happy New Year. As we reflect on 2011, I hope you will join us in being thankful for all of our many blessings. May the beginning of this New Year fill our lives with new hopes, new opportunities, and new promises as we continue to work together for a better future. I wish everyone a safe and happy holiday season with families and loved ones. May you all have a blessed year in 2012.

Alaska Native Language and Advisory Council

My staff has been working diligently on SB 130, which I introduced near the end this last legislative session. It's saddening to learn of recent statistics in Native languages. According to the Alaska Native Language Center's Population and Speaker Statistics published in 2007, only 22 percent Alaska Natives statewide can speak their native language. More specifically, only 29 percent of the Eskimo Aleut population, less than 2 percent of the Tsimshian and Haida, and less than 5 percent of the Athabascan and Tlingit communities combined are fluent speakers. The Eyak language recently lost its last native fluent speaker.

We recently met with Lt. Governor Mead Treadwell at the Alaska Historical Commission meeting in November regarding language preservation and revitalization. Since its introduction, we've further crafted the bill with the assistance of the Bush Caucus and language experts from across the state. My sincere gratitude goes to those who have assisted in this endeavor.

While the University of Alaska and Department of Education have made great strides in language preservation, the Department of Community and Regional Affairs may be the appropriate department to house the advisory council in revitalization efforts and job creation for elders and fluent speakers in communities. I was glad to learn that the Lt. Governor is a strong supporter of this bill. His staff has been very helpful researching possible obstacles it may face, particularly employment of the elderly. We hope to make language preservation as smooth as possible. Our state's tribal languages add a rich dimension to the state's culture. We want to preserve them for the benefit of the entire state.

In hopes that this bill becomes law, I hope the established council will look into revitalization programs and find the most cost effective approach. I would like to see professional experts representing diverse tribes statewide organize and prioritize recommendations of potential solutions to the legislature.

So far, we have strong support from the Bush Caucus and from Senator Albert Kookesh as a Co-Prime Sponsor as well as Representative Alan Dick sponsoring a com-

Adrift tug pushing oil barge secured by commercial tug

A tug pushing a 287-foot barge loaded with 2.2 million gallons of diesel and 1,000 gallons of jet fuel from Valdez to Skagway, was set adrift when its starboard engine failed. The Coast Guard was notified on Sunday that the 95-foot commercial tug had suffered an engine failure leaving the vessel with reduced power and drifting to the northwest. A commercial tug caught up with the disabled tug on Monday and managed to tow it with the barge to Skagway. The Coast Guard Cutter Maple, a 225-foot buoy tender, provided a safety escort for the tow.

Army Corps issues final permit to ConocoPhillips

The U.S. Army Corps of Engineers issued a Clean Water Act permit to ConocoPhillips Alaska, Înc. for the CD-5 Alpine Satellite Development Project. The permit allows ConocoPhillips to build bridges and an above ground pipeline across the Colville River in the National Petroleum Reserve area A. The CD-5 permit authorizes construction of a drill pad, a six-mile long access road, four bridge crossings, two valve pads with access roads and new pipeline support structures. It also includes 22 special conditions intended to minimize the impact to the environment within the Arctic Coastal Plain. ConocoPhillips agreed to pay mitigation fees to the Conservation Fund to compensate for unavoidable losses to aquatic resources.

BOEM issues approval for Shell 2012 Chukchi Sea exploration

The Bureau of Ocean Energy Management issued conditional approval of Shell Gulf of Mexico, Inc.'s revised exploration plan in the Chukchi Sea Planning Area. Shell proposes to drill up to six exploration wells in the Chukchi Sea beginning in the 2012 drilling season. BOEM conducted a site-specific environmental assessment that examined the potential environmental effects of the plan. Shell needs to obtain approvals from the Bureau of Safety and Environmental Enforcement regarding its Oil Spill Response Plan and wellspecific applications for permit to

Among the conditions of approval is a measure designed to mitigate the risk of an end-of-season oil spill by requiring Shell to leave sufficient time to implement cap and containment operations as well as significant clean-up before the onset of sea ice, in the event of a loss of well control. Based on a five-year analysis of historic weather patterns, BOEM anticipates November 1 as the earliest anticipated date of ice encroachment. The 38-day period would also provide a window for the drilling of a rewell, should one be required. Approval is also conditioned on a series of other measures to increase safety and confirm the availability of response equipment, including a well capping and containment system, and to ensure that Shell takes important steps to avoid conflicts with subsistence activities. In addition to BSEE approvals, Shell must also obtain necessary permits from other agencies — the Environmental Protection Agency, the U.S. Fish & Wildlife Service, and the National Marine Fisheries Service.

The Alaska Congressional Delegation expressed dismay that BOEM only issued a conditional approval that put the 38-day buffer in place. U.S. Sen. Mark Begich claims that Alaska has done offshore exploration before and "we've done it safely, and the technology is better now than it has ever been." Senator Lisa Murkowski said, "Some of the conditions attached to this decision seem to be a response to newspaper ads, rather than founded in science." "This arbitrarily curtails an already very short drilling season, unnecessarily putting the project at risk," Murkowski said.

Christen confirmed to serve at the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals

Alaskan Supreme Court Justice Morgan Christen was last week confirmed to serve as the first Alaskan woman on the Ninth Circuit of the U.S. Court of Appeals, in an overwhelming 95-3 vote. Justice Christen was recommended to the White House after Judge Andrew Kleinfeld of Fairbanks retired. Christen earned her law degree from Golden Gate University School of Law in 1986 and was admitted to the Alaska Bar where she worked on complex civil litigation at Preston, Gates & Ellis. In 2001, then Gov. Tony Knowles named her to the Alaska Superior Court and she became presiding judge in 2005. In March 2009, she was named to the Supreme Court by then Gov. Sarah Palin. Christen has been recognized for her extensive public service by the Chamber of Commerce's Athena Society and she was named Alaska Philanthropist of the Year in 2004 with her husband Jim Torgerson.

Nomeites cite alcohol abuse and treatment as priority for solution

By Sandra L. Medearis

Nome's planning panel has declared its comprehensive plan public review draft available for public comment.

That was the consensus at a recent Nome Planning Commission meeting Dec. 6 when commissioners tweaked the draft document once more. Public notice was issued that the 30-day review had begun, following which the document would go back to the NPC or final changes and then to the Nome Common Council to vote on a resolution of ap-

NPC members went around the table with their dream list for progress. Commissioner Randy Romenesko wanted a jumpstart to the housing shortage issue as regards quantity and quality of housing available. He advocated incentives like tax breaks.

Commissioner Larry Petersen

thought a pressing issue was promoting development in the region, especially in oil, gas and minerals.

tiple agencies responsible for safety and security.

"It is a plan with a thousand moving parts that get tweaked day by day," Jason Evans, board chairman for Sitnasuak said. Staff from Sitnasuak and Vitus Marine and other stakeholders in safe and efficient delivery are participating each morning in USCG coordinated conference calls that include SUCG in Juneau, Sitka, Kodiak, state DEC, NOAA weather service, Port of Nome, City of Nome, federal Fish and Wildlife.

"Anytime you do something that hasn't been done before, it takes a tremendous amount of time and coordination," Evans said. "If it has to be done again, it will seem a thousand times simpler."

"The supplier, fuel terminals, ship agents, and vessel captain are working together with Vitus to proceed on schedule," Smith said.

The Renda is not taking on gasoline from Korea because that supply is configured for the Southern California market and does not comply with Nome's winter temperature requirements, Evans said last week. It was foreseen that the gasoline transfer would likely be a barge-to-tanker transfer mid-ocean to save time and simplify logistics. In Asia, Japan had the only source of gasoline correct for Nome, according to Evans.

Last week Lt. Veronica Colbath, USCG public affairs officer in Juneau, said the USCG the ice cutter S/V Healy would assist the Renda's break through the ice if the Healy's schedule permitted. The Healy has since left the Nome area and returned to Dutch Harbor for National Science Foundation staff to disembark following a seven-month science project. Colbath confirmed Monday that the Healy would assist in the Renda's fuel delivery, barring inordinate delays, weather interference preventing safe passage or the Renda's failure to pass inspection required to enter U.S. waters. The cutoff date for the Healy's availability is Jan. 21 when the icebreaker is scheduled for a yard period in Seattle.

We have approval to extend the Healy another month so she can assist. It has already been underway already for seven months. Hopefully in this time all the logistics will fall into place, the port state control inspection the Renda passes, there are no more delays in loading fuel or any other kind of delays; the Renda's there, the Healy's there at the ice edge, the Healy breaks the Renda through about 300 miles of ice. From there everyone involved will do everything they can to ensure the safe delivery of the fuel," Colbath explained. "The financial cost to the Coast Guard and the hardship on the Healy's crew caused by the delay in returning to home port is worth ensuring that the fuel aboard the Renda is transported in a safe manner.'

"The Renda is capable, but I know the capabilities of the United States Coast Guard are tremendous, and if the Healy is there, it gives us another whole level of confidence," Evans

In Nome, consumers are waiting to see what effect the dramatic delivery will have on fuel increases. Evans has declined to say until legal and logistical questions have been answered. Nomeites currently pay $6 a gallon for fuel. Based on information from Evans, added delivery costs could push up prices by a couple of dollars a gallon to start. Before the Renda arrives, there is ample supply of heating fuel in storage. Without the delivery, there could be a shortage in vehicle fuel.

Bonanza Fuel, Inc., is one of two fuel suppliers serving the Nome market. The other distributor is a subsidiary of Crowley Maritime that barges in its own fuel. Commissioner Jeff Darling wanted emphasis on building infrastructure necessary for building the economy in Nome. Later in the meeting, Darling voiced a need for developing a source of fuel other than barges.

"We need to work with government official to have other than windmills spinning on a hill somewhere, Darling said. "About a Russian tanker bringing fuel to Nome from Korea chaps my ass. It's a tough one for me to swallow." Commissioner Tom Sparks wanted to see incentives for complying with building codes.

"We have code updates that are being violated," he said. "We don't have good procedures on how to deal with this."

Over months of work by Nome Planning Commission with their consultant, Eileen Bechtol of Bechtol Associates of Homer, the commission has already built the Nome Comprehensive Plan 2020 on public input and surveys, hashing out many details more than once.

The commission held a town meeting on June 6, 2010, and conducted an online survey regarding plan issues during October, November and December last year. The plan addresses four goals: quality of life, economic development, public improvements and services, and land use goals. Copies of the plan are available at City Hall. Comment period extends into January. The final copy will go to the Nome Common Council for approval.

According to public input, without editing by the NPC, the strengths internal to Nome are sense of community-strong community pride, pride in Nome's history, strong arts presence, neighborliness, access to fabulous country, diversity of cultures, easy access to wilderness and viewing of wildlife; advantagesprivate land ownership, amazing support for students through fundraising and scholarships, already planned tourist events of Iditarod; services-winter road clearing, extensive road system, port; City of Nome services-water and sewer, library, police, museum, city streets; and "Nome gets lots of government funding."

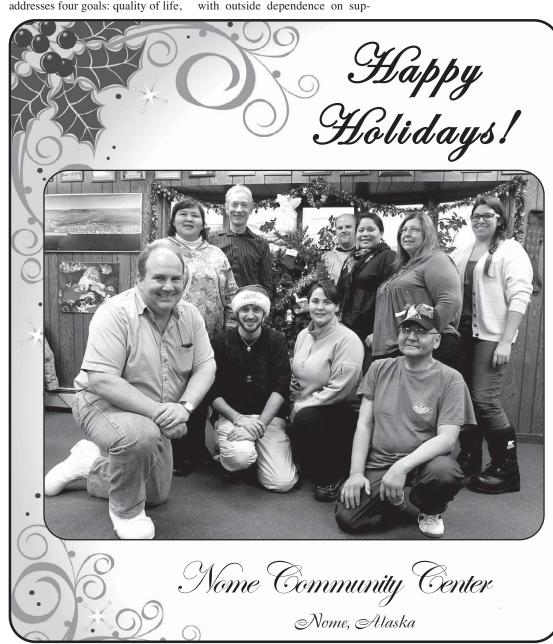

Alcohol abuse tops the list of community concerns. According to public input, the weaknesses within Nome are substance abuse and lack of rehabilitation facilities; economic concerns—overspending, high cost of goods and services and isolation with outside dependence on supplies; governmental issues—tightening land use policies, lack of internal processes to maintain roads, structures and parks in town; education—shortage of college graduates, no trade school, no infant swings for babies at any park, shortage of bike paths for all ages, lack of parenting classes; junk vehicles and derelict structures—not enough motivation to clean up, "abandon" lots started at random and allowed to grow, com-

Governor's budget includes Nome projects

By Diana Haecker

Alaska Governor Sean Parnell presented his proposal for the fiscal year 2013 budget last week at an Anchorage Chamber of Commerce meeting. Parnell proposed a total budget of $12.1 billion, which includes Permanent Fund and federal dollars. The state portion of the budget totals $6.4 billion. Parnell's budget proposes to put $3.7 billion in the state's savings account.

Parnell sounded the drum roll for his budget proposal with three announcements a week before he finally released it on December 15. If it's any indication, Parnell's first announcement was about resource development and the state's willingness to finance roads to resources to the tune of $28.5 million, streamline permitting services for $3.3 million and assessing rare earth mineral exploitation and shale oil assessments for $3.8 million. "Better transportation corridors will open up petroleum and mining opportunities," Governor Parnell said. "Mineral exploration expenditures are up, and with our efforts to streamline the permitting process, we are working to secure Alaska's resources for Alaskans'

The second announcement was about education funding and Parnell's pet project, the Alaska Performance Scholarship. The third press release touched on emergency preparedness, a subject on everybody's mind after a super storm wreaked havoc in coastal Northwestern Alaska. The governor's budget proposal includes $4.9 million for emergency food supplies to be distributed and securely stored in several locations throughout the state. This appropriation, in conjunction with funding provided in last year's capital budget for emergency power and water purification, will help communities prepare and provide critical emergency services. The budget also includes $3 million for a helicopter for the Alaska State Troopers.

Roads to Resources

Parnell budgeted $10 million for a road to Tanana, which would support a route for access to western Alaska. He penciled in $4 million for a road to the Ambler Mining District NovaCopper, a daughter company to NovaGold Resources, has announced plans to explore on their Upper Kobuk mineral property and began a partnership with Kotzebue regional Native corporation NANA. The governor said that road funding would provide for all-season access for exploration and development of mineral resources within the Ambler Mining District. The $4 million would be spent on defining an optimal corridor, proceed with permitting and environmental work, and establish a right-of-way. "A publicprivate partnership will be explored to proceed with financing and construction," the budget release reads. NovaGold was the first beneficiary under the Roads to Resources program under then-Governor Frank Murkowski. The state built the new spur of the Glacier Creek Road from the Nome-Teller Highway to the Rock Creek mine.

Besides resource development. Parnell's priorities include education, public safety and transportation and infrastructure.

The Governor's budget proposal includes forward funding of K-12 education with $1.1 billion and fund the Alaska Performance Scholarship program for 2011 and 2012 high school classes.

Reasoning that it is cheaper to borrow than to spend the state's cash million general obligation bond for several port projects in the state

Nome budget line items

Nome fared well as Parnell included $10 million for the planning of the new state office building. Nome City Manager Josie Bahnke was elated to hear the news. "We weren't expecting to see anything for the state office building, but it shows that the Governor is committed to the project. That's great," Bahnke said.

Another pleasant surprise was to see $1.5 million penciled in for Nome harbor repair of the south and east dock fenders. The city applied for a municipal harbor grant through the DOT, and when all statewide harbor projects were ranked and scored, the Nome project ended up number 10 on the list. "In this context, we were surprised, but very happy to see the $1.5 million for the harbor improvements in the Governor's budget," Bahnke said.

Also in the budget are $3 million for the replacement of so called Sclaircore pipes. Nome Joint Utilities System manager John Handeland explained that he applied to DEC's Municipal Matching Grant Program for funding assistance. "Our application was for East End Sclaircore replacement. The area to be targeted with this grant is N Street and some work west of it on 3rd, 4th and 5th Avenue," Handeland explained. He said that now that funding seems certain, NJUS would prioritize and plan the two- or three-year project. The $3 million would go toward the 2012 construction season.

Other line items for Nome include $1.7 million for deferred maintenance at the Anvil Mountain Correctional Center; and almost $47 million in federal funds for the Nome Airport safety area improvements.

Regional budget items include $500,000 for an airport master plan in Barrow; a snow removal equipment storage building for Little Diomed - $110,000; Northwest Alaska: digital mapping initiative -$16 million; Prudhoe Bay: Geologic Assessment of North Slope shale oil potential — $100,000; $1 million for shale oil environmental data gathering; Shaktoolik: K-12 school renovation just over $9 million; Shishmaref: airport resurfacing for $6.3 million.

NSEDC provides utility subsidy

By Tyler Rhodes, NSEDC communications di-

Recognizing that high energy costs impact nearly every aspect of life in the Norton Sound region, the Norton Sound Economic Development Corporation Board of Directors voted December 7 to provide a $500 utility subsidy for the region's residents.

The program will mirror NSEDC's 2008 initiative that paid $500 toward the residential electricity accounts for each household in NSEDC's 15 member communities. That effort led to NSEDC applying $1.18 million to accounts representing 2,368 households.

Both this year and in 2008, the idea for the subsidy was proposed to the full board by Koyuk representative Elvina Naranjo. The motion enjoyed unanimous support from the NSEDC Board of Directors.

As in 2008, the 2012 subsidy is an isolated contribution to residents of NSEDC's member communities and not constructed to be an ongoing or yearly program. The subsidy complements NSEDC's long-term efforts to bring down energy costs in the region which include NSEDC's Community Energy Fund, its bulk fuel purchasing program and regionwide energy planning efforts in coordination with other entities.

"NSEDC's Board of Directors realize that high energy costs eat up a disproportionate and excessive amount of our residents' income compared to other regions of our state and nation," said NSEDC Board Chairman Dan Harrelson. "As NSEDC's energy programs take hold and start to make a differencelike the Community Energy Fund which allots $1 million for renewable and efficiency projects in each member community—we hope this assistance helps families address other immediate priorities.

As with the 2008 subsidy, households will be required to sign up directly with NSEDC rather than their utility provider. NSEDC plans to launch its effort to sign up households in January and will soon be distributing information to each member community on the details of the subsidy. Please direct any questions regarding the subsidy to the NSEDC Community Benefits Department and not your local utility company. # Christmas thoughts in a Nome cabin

By Chas.L.Guimond Nome City, Alaska Dec. 25, 1900

The bells are tolling the joyous tidings announcing to the world the anniversary of the Birth of our Savior. Joyous tidings to some, but sad and lonely recollection it will bring to others in this land of darkness. Thoughts of the past will come to them, not to gladden, but to sadden their lonely hearts. Sitting in my lonely Cabin as I write, I am one of several thousands more. Shall I tell you what they think about? I will endeavor to do so with one sweet word -Home - Oh!

Blessed is he who on this blessed Christmas can enjoy the comforts and happiness of home, surrounded by the love and loving ones who make the happiness of a home. Think my dear Readers, who happen to read these lines, of the poor lonely one who is spending his Christmas day in a lonely Cabin upon the bleak and dreary shores of Cape Nome. Think of him, who through force of circumstances, is away from the ones he loves and who love him. Will he ever see them again? Will he again receive the sweet kiss of a loving wife? Will he ever again behold the sweet faces of little Angels in the form of his children? Will he again listen to their childish prattle, or is he doomed to die upon these dreary shores a lonely man in a Cape Nome Cabin. (Time will tell) Pray for his return to his beloved ones, that he may enjoy some future Merry Christmas and Happy New Year in the family circle, in his comfortable home. From which, like thousands more, Dame Fortune, with her alluring golden visions, tempted him to leave to seek fortune in Alaska

He left his home, friends and family intending to return in time to spend Christmas with the ones he loves so well. But instead of fortune, he, like thousands more met disappointment. Oh: how true the old saying "Man proposes, but God disposes." As he sits in the stillness of his Cape Nome Cabin, he breathes a prayer to the Angels in Heaven, that they may spread their protecting wings over his loved ones, and that they may be spared to enjoy many a Merry Christmas and Happy New

The old and The New (19th and 20th Century)

By Chas.L. Guimond Nome City.Alaska January 1, 1901

The clock has struck twelve (Midnight). With the last stroke of the clock, the Old Year vanishes and the New Year takes its place. So it is with the nineteenth Century. It has vanished and the new replaced the old, as it is in all things.

The nineteenth century, like its predecessors, has witnessed the great shifts which have taken place during the one hundred years of its existence. Great wars have taken place almost in all parts of the world. Wars which have brought sorrow, pain and devastations upon some country or another. Some of the wars which the nineteenth Century has witnessed have been brought on by the selfishness and greed of men. Some have been brought about between nations through differences of opinions, but more blood has been shed through oppressions and tyranny than from any other Cause.

Nations unable to carry the yoke

of tyranny any longer have resorted to arms in order to gain their liberty and freedoms. Armies of brave men have been annihilated. Women have shed bitter tears at the loss of husbands and sons. Innocent children have been left orphans. All through cruel wars, which might have been avoided if men had used a little sober judgment and had granted to his fellowman freedom and liberty as God has decreed he should enjoy.

Let us hope that the twentieth century may not have to record as many bloody wars and strife's as the nineteenth Century has had. That man may use his ingenuity to a grander and nobler purpose than to devising some new and more effectively murderous Apparatus with which to brutally slaughter his fellow man. That the day is not far distant when nations will settle their difficulties without having recourse to the so called civilized warfare, which means the unnecessary taking of life and shedding of blood.

Supper is over, the flapjacks and bacon and beans has been disposed of by this jolly and amiable crowd of "Boys" as men of all ages are always called in a Mining Camp. The tin plates and cups have all been washed and put away carefully in their usual places by old Charlie the cook, an old timer of bygone days. Everyone is enjoying a good smoke out of his old corn cob pipe.

Kyokuk Joe, who derives his nickname on account of having made a trip two years ago upon the Kyokuk River looking for gold. Having found nothing but granite, he came a poorer but not much wiser man than he was when he went in.

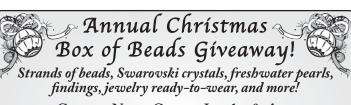

Joe is a good harmless sort of a man. Only he is very fond of recounting his adventures and hair breadth escapes on the Kyokuk when he gets started. He has recounted them so often that he got to believing them himself. Besides he is very fond of impressing upon the minds of his hearers that his memorable trips upon the Kyokuk entitles him to have a better knowledge of

This genial party who is batching it together this winter in a Nome Cabin consists of six good Jolly fellows, namely Kyokuk Joe, Arizona Pete, Chicago Gus, California Dick, Kotzebue Sound Frenchy and old Pan Cake Charlie, the cook that comes from nobody knows where.

So, upon this particular cold January evening upon which I write, Kyokuk Joe is busy with needle and thread and a piece of dog skin, that he picked up on the beach, in making himself a nose protector. He intends to go in the morning after a load of willows three miles up Dry Creek and he does not wish to take essary appendage to the human face frost bitten.

Kotzebue Sound Frenchy is sitting on the other side of the table engaged in cutting off the sleeves of his fur Parkie to make himself a Cap with. Chicago Gus and California Dick are discussing the possibilities of getting on the Police Force if Nome City gets incorporated.

Old Pan Cake Charlie the cook, is in his bunk and swearing in three languages at Arizona Pete, who is sitting on a box with his old cracked fiddle. It sounds like the croaking of the musical frog or the distant Melody of the Rocky Mountain burro. To his own accompaniment upon that ancient fiddle, he sings a few lines of the refrain of that once popular but now very much out of date song: Annie Roone. When he gets to the refrain on his old fiddle, he then in a voice more accustomed to singing out: "I'll take mine straight" than to sing the refrain of a beautiful song, he bellows out

I am her Beau.
She is my Annie.
I am her Joe.

As it is all he knows, he commences over and over again at these same lines. That is what makes old Pan Cake Charlie angry and swears that he wishes Pete and Annie Rooney in a warmer clime than Nome, where the weather don't register 40 below zero. He calls down all sorts of maledictions on poor Pete and his old fiddle, but Pete keeps on scratching on the old fiddle and never misses to sing the lines when he gets to them.

-She is my sweetheart-

"What are you making, Joe ?" asks Chicago Gus.

"A nose protector."

"What in the name of goodness do you want of a nose protector and the Thermometer today 16 above?"

"Well, I am going after willows tomorrow up Dry Creek"

-She is my sweetheart-

"O for goodness sake Pete, Lite up on Annie Rooney,"says California Dick and "let us hear what Joe has to say."

"So you are going after willows tomorrow?"

"Yes I am, and I don't want to take any chances of freezing my nose as I did up on the Kyokuk ."

"O Lord, The Kyokuk again!" says old Pan Cake Charlie.

"Well, didn't I tell you about it?"

"Don't remember."

"No, I told old Charlie about it. Do you remember Charlie, when I told you about freezing my nose on the Kyokuk?

"Oh yes, I remember all about it Joe, and have pity on me and let me sleep."

come from the balance of the company in chorus.

"Let up, Pete, for heaven's sake! Break it off short."

"Well, it was like this," continued Joe, "I went hunting one day on the Kyokuk."

"O Lord: O Lord: have mercy on me." mutters Old Pan Cake Charlie.

"It was the time that I killed that Polar bear that weighed three thousand one hundred and nine pounds and three quarters. You heard me speak about it Charlie."

"Oh, yes I did."

"You killed what?" simultaneously exclaimed Chicago Gus and California Dick. "What are you talking about Joe? Polar bears ain't found on the Kyokuk. They are only found in the Northern seas near the North Pole."

-She is my sweetheart.-

Here old Pan Cake Charlie was heard to say under his breath: "Of course I wish Pete had been there with his d—ed old fiddle and that the bear would have chewed up fiddle and all, and I wouldn't have to endure all this misery."

"Why, You fellows ain't seen anything. Go up on the Kyokuk and then you'll see something."

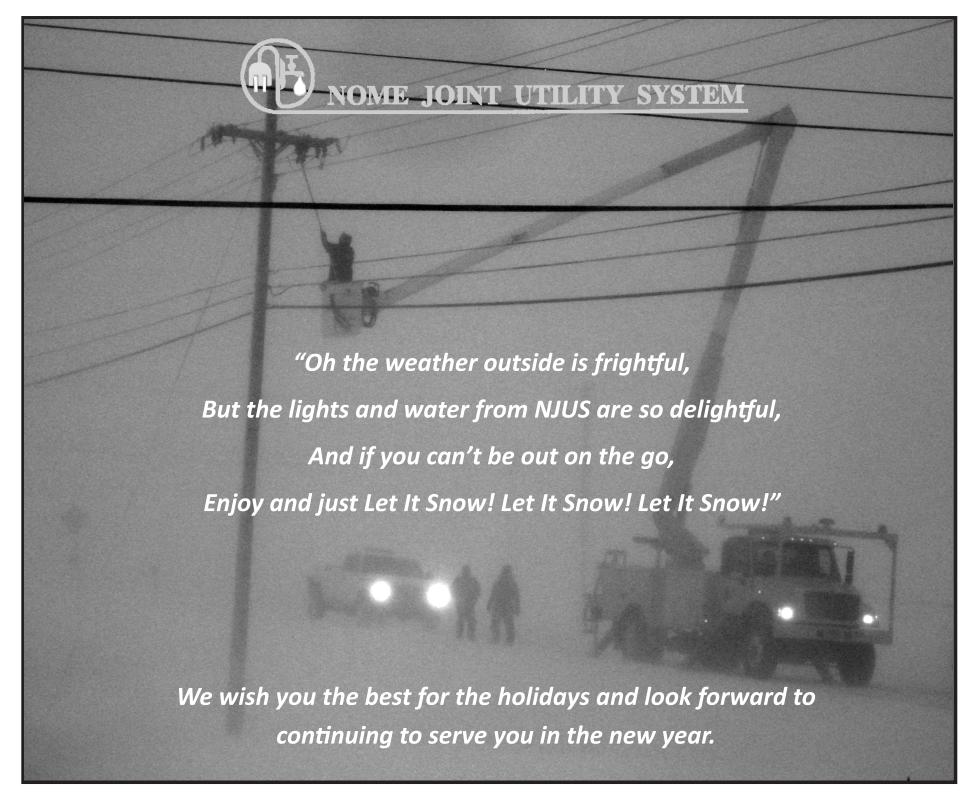

"That's all right," puts in Chicago Gus, "But when it comes to killing Polar bears on the Koykuk, that's too rich for my blood. I can't swallow that. You don't believe it, do you?"

"No I don't!" Simultaneously

"Well," said Joe in support of his story, "if ever you come across Captain Crowell, he was our Captain up there. I mean Captain Crowell that piled up the Harriet on Nome beach

-She is my sweetheart-

" Oh! Oh" and another grunt from old Pan Cake Charlie.

"Captain Crowell will tell you the woods were full of them, and Frenchy, he'll tell you he saw lots of them on Kotzebue Sound."

"O yes: I zee lots of Polar bairs. I kill zix of them animals. Some ones go much bigger as diz cabine. I kill em vun ven I discover vun big quartz mines. It waz all rich with vit differents metalles. Very, very rich."

"Well, what did you do with the mine?"

"Oh: eet iz thair yet,"

"What was in it? asked Dick. "Gold or silver?"

"O all kinds of such dings."

"Didn't you get it assayed?

"Yes,"

"Well, you ought to know what there is in it."

" I cain not read the paper ze man give to me."

"Have you got the assay certificate?"

"Yes, et es in mine valisse."

"Get it and let us look at it,"

Frenchy goes and gets the certificate and hands it to Dick to read, and this is a true copy of it:

This is to certify that I have this day examined a piece of rock which is said to have been found upon Crazy Mountain by a crazy man in crazy mining district on Kotzebue Sound Alaska and find it to contain the following!

Strong expectations of hard work.
Good indications of poverty.

Sulphurets of despair. Manganese of damnation.

Oxides of bankruptcy. Silica of insanity.

Many signs of starvation, and traces of suicide for the man who discovered it.

John Shuhymagal Assayer

The party broke into a laugh at the conclusion of the reading of this curious paper. Frenchy looked at me and then the other, unable to account for their merriment.

"Oh! Yes,very well," says Dick. "Are you going to work it?"

"Vell, I dink I see enough soon."

"I think you'd better go back and dig a hole in it and bury yourself," chips in Old Pan Cake Charlie.

"Vat you know about mines, you old fool! You ask Joe. He know some dings about it.

He prospect on the Koykuk and he know all about der mines."

"O shut up, you frog eating fool and you fellows go to bed!"

By this time, Pete had changed off from Annie Rooney to the Arkansas Travelers

"For Heaven's sake Pete, let up for tonight," says Chicago Gus. "Let us hear something about the country, while we have a chance. Dick and I are New Comers in the Country and may not have another chance to meet with two old timers like Joe and Frenchy to get some informations.

"Oh! Yes!" says Frenchy. "I will tell you all I know about de country.

"Yes and a h-ll of a lot more," mutters old Charlie.

"Now Joe, you commence to tell us about that mine that you discovered on the Kyokuk.

"O! Lord have mercy, have mercy, they are going to get him started again!" exclaims old Pan Cake.

"Yes, Yes, I tell you all about eet," puts in Frenchy.

"Not you! you d——d fool," says Dick. "What the h-ll do you know about the Kyokuk? You never was there."

"Well, it was just like this," commenced Joe. "I was Polar bear hunting, see, when I stumbled against a piece of rock and of course I could tell by the weight of it that it contained gold, see. So I take it aboard of our steamer the Joy Weekly. (steamer took its name from the fact that it went into the river one week and tried to get down the next), I showed it to my partner, Captain Crowell, an expert miner from nowhere. He pronounced it good, so, as I had no way to assay it, I put it in to the fine box of the Troy Weekly to melt, see. Next morning, with the help of my fine man, I took it out. The gold, copper and silver, not the rock of course.'

"Of course not, of course not. "answered both Gus and Dick, who had become very much interested.

riment at the wonderful tale of this novel way of assaying.

"Well, of course we could not weigh the different chunks of metals on a gold scale so we put them on a Fairbanks scale with the following result: Gold, forty three thousand dollars to the ton; silver, twelve thousand dollars and copper six thousand dollars

Nome's annual vaccination clinic serves 300 pets

By Diana Haecker

The annual pet vaccination clinic held in Nome brought a total of 300 Nome pets to be vaccinated by Nome veterinarian Dr. Derrick Leedy. As soon as most of the fourlegged clients came through the door of the new location, the Nome Ambulance Garage, they knew what's a coming: Shots to ward off canine parvo, distemper, the adeno virus, para influenza and to top it off, a stinging dose of mercury-free rabies vaccination. After the bad part of being poked, the animals received the tasty dewormer paste.

Dr. Leedy said that out of the 300 pets, about 40 were cats, the rest being dogs. Leedy said that he also offered bordetella vaccine and canine influenza vaccine. He said that canine influenza is a serious disease that has not reached Alaska yet – it is mostly occurring in California and is a disease that jumped to dogs from horses. Although Leedy offered bordetella vaccines, nobody accepted those. Bordetella bronchiseptica causes kennel cough in dogs. The cats received a special feline rabies vaccination and a combo that included a vaccination against feline

Feline leukemia has occurred in Nome and in cats it's brought on by a virus. "It's like the human HIV virus in as much as it suppresses the function of the immune system," explained Dr. Leedy. He said there is no treatment for feline leukemia. "That's why vaccination is so crucial," he said. While the animals were there, Dr. Leedy gave them a mini-checkup, observed how they walked and checked for heart functions

"The value of these vaccination clinics is that I see the animals and check for their medical conditions," Leedy said. He was able to detect three systolic heart murmurs in older pets that, if left untreated, would progress quickly into congestive heart failure. Dr. Leedy also noticed six pets who needed to get their teeth cleaned.

"The clinic is not just a vaccination clinic but also a medical clinic," Leedy said. "After 40 years in practice I can almost just look at a pet and say 'Yes, I need to check his heart because I suspect a problem.' It works! This is why it is so important to have your pet seen each year."

The vaccination clinic started on Wednesday and ended on Saturday. Volunteers helped with the paperwork and handling the animals. Leedy said that he worked with two physicians assistants from Norton Sound Regional Hospital and had help from Sharon Keeney, Loretta Bullard, Chrystie Salesky and Bruce Tungwenuk.

At end of the clinic, 293 animals were licensed in the City of Nome and 300 animals were vaccinated.

"Wonderful!" exclaimed Gus and Dick

"Yess, vary much!" says Frenchy.
"And vat for you vaz not gone back and work dat mine Joe?"

"Well, copper and silver are so low that we thought we'd wait until it comes up, as all the other suckers in our Company don't know anything about it. My partner Captain Crowell is somewhere east now forming a Company, see."

At this moment a noise is heard as of a telegraphic wire snapping in two and Pete's old fiddle suddenly stops . All hands turn in the direction of Pete who is still sitting on his box, his arms hanging to his sides. In one hand he holds Old Charlie's enemy the fiddle, in the other the bow. In an instant Joe, Gus, Dick and Frenchy are at his side.

Dick is the first one to speak: "What's the matter Pete? Did the gee strings on the bobstays of your back snapp in two?

"Tell us whats the matter," says Gus. "Maybe we can do something for you."

Even Joe, who has had so many hair breadth escapes while prospecting and hunting the Polar bears on the Kyokuk, turns pale at the blanched face of Pete and mutters: "I think apoplexy brought on by eating too many flap jacks."

Frenchy steps up and endeavers to reach for his pulse when all of a sudden Pete raises his right hand and hits him a crack across the jaw with the bow." Take that you frog eating Kotzebue Sound liar!" Then he points to the fiddle.

"A broken string." simultaneously answers Joe, Gus, and Dick.

At the word "broken string", Old Pan Cake Charlie, who every one thinks asleep, jumps out of bed and lets a whoop that would have done credit to a Comanche Warrior, and shouts: "hurrah, hurrah. Ha ha he he he ho ho ho. Good-by Annie Rooney. Good-bye Arkansas traveler! We are rid of you both for this Winter at least, as cat gut is as scarce in Nome as Cats are themselves." There is no fear of a saw string, and in his glee, dances the highland fling on one leg and catches hold of Frenchy and swings him around the Cabin in a manner which is more forcible than decorum in a well regulated ball room.

Pete, after casting a loving glance on the old fiddle, hangs it on its customary peg. Until the broken cat gut can be replaced, the light is put out and pretty soon each of these Jolly companions is playing a tune with his own nose that make the sides of the Cabin shake.

The End for Now

Nome Boy's Basketball team dominates Delta Huskies

By Stephen Palmatier

Basketball is officially upon us! This past weekend, the Nome-Beltz High School Nanook boy's basketball team got their season off to a fast start by winning both games played against Delta Junction. In the first game they were able to hold a 4th quarter lead and hang on 59-51. However, in the second game, they faced a 4th quarter deficit to which the Nanooks were able to overcome in a 61-58 thriller.

In the first game of the weekend, the Nanooks got out to an early lead in the first quarter with a 16-11 first lead. By halftime, the lead for the Nanooks was only three points at 27-24. However, the big difference in the game was the way the Nanooks came out in the second half. In the third quarter, the Nanooks scored 20 points and in the fourth quarter another 12. The second half was simply too much offense for Delta Junction to be able to keep pace with.

The big story of the first game though was the play of senior forward Nathan Blandford. Blandford scored a game high 29 points for the Nanooks dominating both inside the paint and from the outside shooting the ball. Tyler Eide and Jens Irelan each contributed eight points each alongside to help Blandford's performance.

In the second game the next night, the game started off even better for the Nanooks by getting out to a quick 16-8 lead in the first quarter. The Nanooks then had trouble on defense in the second quarter forcing a 25-25 tie at halftime. In the third quarter, the defense did not seem to improve at all as the Nanooks gave up 16 points in that quarter and faced a 41-35 deficit after three quarters. And then in the fourth quarter, the game completely changed momentum to the Nanooks as they finished the fourth quarter with 26 points capping a comeback three point victory.

After the first game, the big question for the Nanooks was going to be the production coming from other players besides Blandford. They were able to answer that question in the second game as Tyler Eide exploded for 24 points and freshman Daniel Head added 12 points. Blandford, who was struggling for much of the game, finished with a respectable 14 of his own.

"In this game, Delta Junction boxed in Nathan Blandford, and it required our other players to step up which they did," said Pat Callahan, head coach of the Nanook boys. The Nanook boys with the two wins now hold a 42 game winning streak at home and head to the ACS Tournament in Anchorage in two weeks looking to continue their good start to the season.

"We have to get our big men and our players to cover shots better, but I think we're going to get a lot better as the season progresses," said Callahan.

Nome Lady Nanooks win against Kotzebue Huskies

By Stephen Palmatier
The Nome-Beltz High School Lady Nanooks basketball squad kicked off their season in the right way by sweeping both games against the Kotzebue Huskies. In the first game, the Lady Nanooks won with efficiency and solid defense winning 58-51 and in the second game won a

In the first game against Kotzebue, the Lady Nanooks got out to an 18-12 lead at the end of the first quarter. By halftime, the two teams remained pretty even with Nome holding a 28-22 lead. However, it was the third quarter that made the difference as the Lady Nanooks

Nome Kennel Club plans modest sled dog race schedule

By Diana Haecker

In last week's general meeting of the Nome Kennel Club, only a handful of mushers showed up to discuss the state of the club and talk about future endeavors.

After the 2008 All Alaska Sweepstakes race, the club fell in disarray to the point that at last week's meeting the seated board didn't know who occupies which seat, when their terms are up and who occupies a two-year or three-year seat. Currently serving on the five-member board are Kirsten Bey, Sandra Medearis, Janet Balice, Pat Owens and Chrystie Salesky. Mike Owens made the motion to keep the board as is, straighten out the basic information on who is up for elections and hold annual elections in the next general meeting in December 2012.

Outside forces are at work that impact the club's finances. Kirsten Bey reported that the club still has money, but proceeds from gaming permits are dwindling as Solid Green Bingo is not doing much in terms of pull tabs anymore and the bingo parlor is about to be turned into a coffee shop. The gaming money was traditionally used for the club's sled dog races and paid out as prize money.

Also, NKC rents an office space in the basement of the Federal Building, which recently has been sold. It is unclear if the new owners (their name has not yet been publically revealed) will stick to the current lease agreement of $200 per month.

An item of discussion was the Nome Kennel Club's web server which hosts the Nome-Announce list serve. The list serve, administered by Jim Dory, has outgrown NKC's web server's capabilities and it would take an upgrade to keep up with all the activity on Nome-Announce. The NKC members made no decision on whether or not to take on additional costs for the Nome Kennel Club to run this community service. Bey said that members of Nome-Announce have offered to chip in to defray the costs so that NKC does not bear the financial burden of the serv-

There haven't been any competitive sled dog races held in three years and in order to resurrect the tradition to run dogs and hold sled dog races, Mike Owens said, the basics have to be addressed. "We need to go back to the fundamentals and put trails in place," Owens said. The club has trail stakes that need to be taped with reflector tape. Bey said she invited snow bikers and other trail users to pick up stakes in order to re-stake the trail to maintain a trail system that could benefit the community as well. Maintaining trails has always been a challenge due to the area's notorious blowing snow that obliterates trails within hours of being put in.

The club's present members discussed ways to become involved in the community again and how to reengage mushers in a racing schedule. Out of the eight active mushers present, most said they don't have enough dogs fit enough to field a 12dog race team. In the light that NKC basically has to go back to reinstate sled dog racing in Nome, consensus was to start a modest race schedule with the first race being an 8-dog, 10-mile event. The course would take the teams around the existing trail loop starting at the snow dump near Gold Hill, going by Icy View, toward Newton Peak, parallel to the Beam Road and back. Mushers who showed interest in racing do so for the experience and to get their dogs used to a racing situation.

stormed out of halftime by scoring 20 points in the third quarter and taking a 48-35 lead at the end of three. By the end of the game, that deficit was too much to overcome for Kotzebue as Nome took a sevenpoint victory home with them.

The Lady Nanooks played the game strong as a team getting contribution from lots of different players. Dylan Johnson led the Nanooks with 15 points while Chloe Mattheis and Devynn Johnson each contributed 12

In the second game, it was totally different, as Kotzebue seemed to be able to realize what worked and did not work the night before. The Lady Nanooks started out strong once again opening with a 25-10 halftime lead and seemed to be in full control. However, in the second half, the defense and offense let them down, as Kotzebue was able to storm all the way back from the halftime deficit. However, in the end, the lead was just too much for the Huskies to overcome and the Lady Nanooks held on for a two-point victory.

In the second game, the same contribution was true once again from different people. Mattheis and Taylor points and Devynn Johnson added 8 of her own.

In both of the games, the Lady Nanooks played overall great defense using their height advantage that they had over Kotzebue. It was also evident that with the first games of the season came a lot of mental and communication problems with the Lady Nanooks forcing plenty of turnovers.

"I really liked their intensity that they came out with in both games," said Don Stiles, head coach of the Lady Nanooks. "There's a lot of things we still need to work on, but overall I'm happy with their performance. The Lady Nanooks, now at 2-0 to start the season head to the ACS Tournament in Anchorage in two weeks looking to continue their good play to start the year.

"We need to work on our press break and defense in particular these next few weeks," said Stiles.

Basketball Scoreboard

The Nome girls defeated Kotzebue 58-51 on Friday night at the Nome Rec Center. Nome was led by Dylan Johnson's 15 points and Chloe Mattheis scored all 12 of her points in the second half to help secure the victory. The same two teams met again on Saturday, where the Nome girls scored a 43-41 win over the Kotzebue Lady Huskies

The Nome boys defeated the Delta Huskies 59-51 on Friday night. Nathan Blandford led Nome with 29 points. Jens Irelan and Tyler Eide each added 8 points. The Nome Nanook boy's team won the rematch on Saturday, defeating the Delta

The Nome boys extended their current home court winning streak to 42 games. In Saturdays game Nome overcame an eight point 4th quarter deficit by outscoring Delta 26-17 in the 4th quarter. Tyler Eide led the way with 24 points and Nathan Blandford added 14 points and 14 rebounds. Freshman Daniel Head chipped in 12 points and 7 rebounds. Nome 's season record improved to 2-0 on the season

Veteran's Day Celebration Unalakleet Middle School Project

By Denise Thomas

The Unalakleet Middle School students participated in a project honoring the fifty-two military Veterans in Unalakleet. The Veterans were invited to the school Friday, November 11, for a turkey lunch.

The middle school students dipped pretzel sticks in chocolate and made individual packages to give to each Veteran. Also, the students helped collect pictures and make a slideshow with pictures of the Veterans, their name and branch of service that each person served in.

The students served lunch to the Veterans and handed out the dipped pretzels. The students had the opportunity to interact with their Elders/veterans in a different capacity.

Middle school students serving Unalakleet veterans dipped pretzels.

Students in other grades made desserts and posters for the special occasion. Mr. Wolcott, the music teacher, played the National Anthem on his trumpet. Many of the elementary classes came to the multi-purpose room for the playing of the National Anthem and to handout cards they had made to the Veterans.

Veterans gather in Unalakleet for Veteran's Day Celebration.

The Unalakleet School students and staff are very proud of the service and sacrifice made by our veterans and their families over the years. Please join with us in thanking the men and women who have and who are currently serving in the United States Armed Forces.

NSEDC partners with BSSD to provide College & Career Exploration

By Perry Corsetti

In October 52 BSSD students and 13 teachers traveled to the Anchorage area to explore college and career training options. Funds were provided for college and career exploration by Norton Sound Economic Development Corporation. For some, this was their first experience at a large-scale college fair. Over 120 colleges were present for the University of Alaska sponsored college fair at the Den'iana Center. BSSD students had the opportunity to visit and interview the college and training centers of their choice. Students from 10 BSSD schools participated: Brevig Mission, Gambell, Golovin, Savoonga, Shishmaref, Stebbins, Wales, White Mountain, Elim, and Unalakleet.

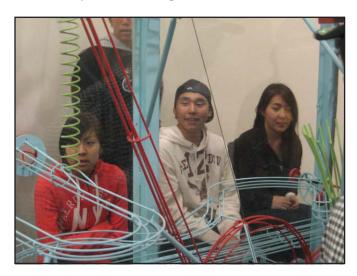

After the college fair, students spent three full days visiting and touring college and career training centers including: University of Alaska, UAA Community and Technical College – Aviation program, Career Academy, Alaska Job Corps, International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, Alaska Native Tribal Health Consortium, British Petroleum, and Ryan Air. During these tours students were exposed to programs in aviation, construction, process technology, business, and health. Additionally, students saw some familiar faces at both Career Academy and UAA where we have former BSSD students enrolled in programs.

The trip is designed to show students the variety of opportunities they have for post-secondary training here in Alaska. Many BSSD graduates continue to live in the region or their home village. An emphasis was placed on regional workforce needs and career opportunities.

Additionally, training for careers with flexible or alternative work schedules (like working in the oil and gas industry with a 2-week on, 2-week off schedule) were investigated.

These types of careers may be options for some of our students that can provide them a good economic living and still allow them to live in the region on their time off.

The students and staff of BSSD would like to thank NSEDC for the opportunity to explore these college and career options.

Storm Inspires Poetry in Brevig

By Jennifer Diana

When the storm struck Brevig Mission, it didn't stop us. Instead, we came together and united. Within a period of a few hours, the junior high and high school students grabbed clipboards, paper, pencils and cameras and set about to make observations of what they were hearing, seeing, smelling and tasting. These observations were recorded on paper and in pictures. Then, all the students were brought back together to make a finished product out of their findings.

They would share their pictures and words and creatively make poems. This was all done in one afternoon. Students typed up their findings, compiled it and viola...a packet of words and phrases were given to the students to craft clever poems from. The students then cut the words and phrases to create their own stanzas. The following poems have been selected anonymously by the students from Brevig Mission. We hope you enjoy them as much as we enjoyed making them.

The Storm

By Lillian Olanna

People are gasping about the cloudy storm, The lagoon is flooded and water is coming out of the ground, people are coldly repairing roofs on their houses, People are very miserable and excited about this scary experience,

Some broken roofs, destroyed by the wind,

Big splashing waves (bigger than me) crashing onto the shore making part of the beach erode, amazed by the big waves & worried about abandoned beach houses,

The roaring strong wind, wild and crazy, almost blew me down,

Wires are wildly blowing away.

The insane wind was blowing my hair and whistling in my ears,

Thank god we're making it through this crazy storm.

Let's Never Forget This One

By Helen Bruns

Destroyed by the waves and the wind...
There are so much things washed up on the beach
Dead seals, wood, ice chunks, boats pulled up high

Humongous waves, wrecking Brevig's beautiful beach

So big and deadly

Rising higher.. And higher.. And higher Be prepared for anything that could happen..

Waves splashing, making a pretty picture but it's not a good place to be

Water flowing, on the beach and back into the Water gushing out of the tunnel, quickly filling up both lagoons

Insanely windy, wires going nutty
Wind whistling, loud and clear Wind blowing my hair all over the place, as it's blowing the water onto the shore
Making me lose my balance

So wild and crazy, makes me wonder what could happen next..

Chaos just about every where you go, people talking about it every where you go Such a scary, horrifying, frightening, spooky, nerve-racking experience I'll never forget about this alarming storm

I'll never forget about this alarming storm I didn't think it was gonna be this bad, expect the unexpected.

Flood After the Big Storm

By Kelsi

Waves roaring. Waves crashing.

Dirty and salty water. Big waves crashed all along the ocean.

Tasted the nasty salt water from the ocean.

Waves Crashing on the shore.

Felt like the storm was going to last forever.

Whistling away.

Wind blew very coldly in our faces.

Waves, whistling from strong wind.

Water pouring.

Slushy snow all over.

Moving back and forth from beach to town. Men gathering.

Teachers skipping classes.

Abandoned beach houses.

A lot of people are concerned about the weather. Water at least ten feet higher in the ocean.

Insane winds going fifty to hundred Miles Per Hour.

Amazed by big waves and worried for people living down beach.

Scary experience.

By Carolyn Heflin

St. Michael students are keeping their promise of rebuilding their shop that burned down last May. With the direction of career and technical education teacher Mark Thompson and the partnership of Kawerak Child Care Services, St. Michael students are building a better future for themselves by learning important vocational skills that they can carry with them into adulthood and into the workforce. These vocational skills will ensure that our students are not only invaluable to the community of St. Michael, but to the region as well.

Middle school students show what they can do.

Wales Morning Meeting

By Ms. Standafer

Every morning Wales School has a morning meeting in the lobby of the school to sing and dance to different music each week, make announcements, recognize birthdays and say the pledge. The morning music/dance helps students, staff and any visitors wake up and get energized for the day. We have had music ranging from Cotton-eyed Joe and Eye of the Tiger to Chicken Dance and Head Shoulders Knees and Toes. Each of the certified teachers have a week to pick a song using either DVD player, our new NEC flat screen or Ms. Standafer's Wii. Here the students are dancing to Who Let the Dogs Out?

National Guard brings Operation Santa Claus to Wales

Santa, Mrs. Claus and 35 helpers brought Operation Santa Claus and holiday cheer on an Alaska National Guard C-130 to the village of Wales on Dec. 9.

The Alaska Air National Guard C-130 landed on the village's airstrip and was warmly greeted by community members on snowmachines. The temperature, in the teens, was chilly but not cold by Wales' standards.

Operation Santa Claus volunteers and community members quickly off-loaded boxes from the aircraft and onto sleds tied to snowmachines for the mile ride to the Wales school.

"It's a great time of year and a unique way for us to get out and sup-port Alaska citizens," said Col. Mike Bridges, director of logistics for the Alaska Army National Guard. "I've probably been on at least 20 Operation Santa Claus trips and each one is a special experience.

While boxes were unpacked in the school's gym, members of Alaska Brass, a brass and percussion ensemble from the U.S. Air Force Band of the Pacific, began to play festive holiday tunes while the gym filled with nearly everyone from the village.

Following the festive music, a prayer of thanks was given by Alaska Air National Guard Chaplain Brian Musselman before a warm meal, made and donated by Pentagon North, Inc. of Anchorage, was served.

To the delight of everyone, ice cream sundaes were also provided by Tastee Freez, while village youth performed a dance for the audience and their guests.

And then the moment everyone was waiting for, Santa and Mrs. Claus arrived

"I enjoy visiting with the elders and veterans of the community, while they see their kids interact with Santa Claus," Bridges said. "It's a great time for everyone involved."

One by one, each child had a chance to visit Santa and receive a gift. They were also given a new backpack filled with a couple of pieces of fresh fruit, books, a toothbrush and other incidentals.

"This event was incredible," said

Roxie Quick, the Wales School principal. "It was a great way to show the children a lesson in sharing and about the volunteer spirit."

Second graders tell their favorite Christmas memories

By Mr. Slingsby's Nome Elementary School Second Graders

My favorite Christmas was when I was 7 years old. I was at my family's house on Christmas morning opening presents with my mom, my dad, grampa, gramma, and my other papa. I got presents from all of them, even Santa! When I was opening presents it was the best time ever! I got a pillow pet and tons more clothes to wear to school! In my stocking I got school pencils and candy rockets. I was so excited I almost screamed! I also got lots of candy canes. I gave my mom a big gift. It was me. This was the best Christmas ever because I was with my family. - Sadie Ellison

My favorite Christmas was when I was 7 years old visiting my grandmas and grandpas in Birthed, Colorado. We had to make Christmas cookies for Santa! My brother Hayden and my mom helped me make chocolate chip cookies for Santa. Christmas in Colorado was crazy because Santa had to land on the grass because there was no snow. I could not believe that Santa had to land on the grass! But he had no choice because we were in a warm place that doesn't usually get a lot of snow. Santa brought me a hex bug nano. It came with 2 hex bugs and 3 nano hives, 6 connecting pieces. The hex bugs were red and blue and small. In my stocking I got a Star Wars Clone Wars Season 1 Travel pack. I also got a $2 bill sealed in plastic so I wouldn't spend it. My little brother Hayden got a lava traz Lego set and Clone Wars Season 2 travel pack. He also got a $2 bill in plastic to save. He loved it! We all had a great Christmas! —Bode Leeper

One Christmas in the middle of the night, my dad woke me up! He heard a loud crash in the kitchen. Santa had broke the light! I looked at the tree and was surprised to see presents! I looked at the cookie plate and all the cookies were gone! I thought that Santa was too fat and broke the light or he must have been afraid of dogs. I felt sad and mad that Santa broke my light. I wish that Santa was skinnier. But I was very happy that he came to my house, even if he broke my light. Santa brought me a pillow pet, and a cash register! I also got a school set to play teacher with. Those were the main presents. I use the cash register to count money. P.S. Never bring a dog inside at Christmas time! The

My favorite Christmas was when I was 6 years old. I lived in my yurt with my mom and dad in Talkeetna. In Talkeetna there are lots of trees. My mom, dad and me went to go get our Christmas tree with the dogs and our sleds. I got to go double dog sledding with my dad! He pulled me and my mom on a sled behind his. It was so fun! We got a beautiful tree and brought it back to our yurt. I will never ever forget how much fun we had. I remember what Santa brought me. He brought me a DVD player! I loved it! I also got a doll that I named Bittie. My mom and I got my dad a dog collar that was bright pink with diamonds for my favorite little baby girl dog Ariel. It was the best Christmas ever.

-Lizzy Hahn

My favorite Christmas was when I was 6 years old at our house in Nome. I was at my house with my mom, dad, and brother Phillip. We all had the Christmas spirit! I remember Santa bringing me my favorite toy. It was a Liv Doll. They are dolls that have wigs on that you can take off and trade. They are a lot of fun! It came with a comb. I also got a Rain doll. A Rain doll is a doll dressed up for the rain. It came with an umbrella, a plastic bag, and a comb. It was the best Christmas -Maggie Taylor

My favorite Christmas was when I was 6 years old at our house and our neighbor's house in Dexter. My dad, mom, brother, and pet cat Daphne, along with my neighbors Sharon, AnnieKate, Zachariah, Nicholai, Nathaniel and their dog were there. My favorite memory of that Christmas was making gingerbread houses on Christmas Eve with our neighbors. I felt just so ecstatic! I didn't give any presents...I think, but I got a nutcracker, coloring book, paper dolls, a Nintendo DS, and a mini garden and shirt from my auntie Audrey's store in Minnesota. We went to David and Sharon's house for Christmas dinner. There were pies, ham, and turkey! For dessert there was ice cream. Christmas is the best holiday ever! - Jenae Matson house on Tobuk Alley when I was 6 years old. My mom, dad, and sister were there. My favorite memory of that Christmas was when I opened my present and saw a Wii that came with Sports Resorts! I became ecstatic and took a pinecone from the tree and crushed it to pieces. I was 6 vears old, what do you expect? When it was all over and I calmed down we went back to sleep. I only wish my sister was awake. She slept through Christmas! I almost forgot, I got a duck thing-a-ma-bobber. It can fly and comes with a gun that make the duck fall out of the sky. I also got magnetic blocks that came with cards that show you how to make cubes, rectangles, stars, and My mom got a gray and black fuzzy hat with strings. The best part of this Christmas was that we went to Hawaii 3 days later. We had a great vacation as a family. Merry Christmas! The End.

-Colin McFarland

My best Christmas memories were last year when I was six years old. It was super fun. I was lucky because my sister got me a Tron Cycle and an Atlantis Lego set. I was lucky again because my Dad gave me a very fast sled, a ninja turtle action figure, and a duck tape wallet! The sled was a lot of fun because it almost beat everybody at Cemetery Hill. I still have the sled and I used it at Bode's house on Newton Hill for his birthday. It is still very fast! The wallet was really cool because it was made out of duck tape. I lost it though. Even though I lost it I still liked it a lot. And that was my best Christmas ever! –Paris Hebel

The best Christmas in my life was when I was 4 years old. My family, even my grandma and grandpa, went to Hawaii! It was hot! I couldn't believe it because it was winter! I went to the swimming pool two times a day. One time in the morning and then one time at night when it was dark outside. I would go visit my grandma and grandpa at their hotel room everyday. I can't remember what Santa brought me because I was only 4. But I do know that Santa visited us. We took lots of rides and went to a museum. Everybody in my family had lots of fun. It was a great Christmas and I wish that I could go to Hawaii again someday. -Katie Smith

My favorite Christmas was when I was six years old. I woke up at like 4 o'clock in the morning and was excited and happy! I wasn't even tired when I woke up. I woke my mom and dad and my sister. I ran down the stairs and me and my sister opened our presents. Santa brought me a pillow pet and a Nintendo DSI that was hot pink. My favorite color! I also got a really cool shirt. My sis-

School board passes tobacco-free school policies

By Lori Head

Tobacco policies and school closure make-up dates were the main topics of last week's school board regular meeting.

Danielle Sylvester, K-12 grade tobacco coordinator, along with NBHS student members of the TATU group (Teens Against Tobacco Use) encouraged the board to pass two new policies regarding students, staff and visitors using tobacco on school district property (owned or leased). Board Member Jennifer Reader had questions regarding enforcement of the policy and board discussion also involved how the policy would affect those who rent or lease space from the school district. Michael Brawner, superintendent, wanted to gather more information before answering too quickly. Board President Betsy Brennan felt that those issues would be addressed in the AR's (administrative regulations) rather than the policy itself. Both policies passed with applause and a standing ovation from the TATU members.

School closure make-up day

A calendar revision was another action item on the agenda, which generated some interesting discussion. As Nome's students and staff stayed home during a recent blizzard, administrators had the daunting task of choosing a suitable make-up day. Their first attempt, the Saturday in the same week of the closure, was not received well by some community members due to the time of year and the short notice given, and was canceled. However, it was explained that in the future, this may need to be the solution to school closures as finding a make-up day is a challenging, fiscal decision. Fiscal, due to the fact that any make up day assigned to a week that school is already in session for five days, Monday through Friday, would be a sixth day if held on Saturday and staff would be paid overtime for that day. What about the first week in January where there are only four school days? No, that Monday is a paid holiday and counts as a day so a Saturday school day would still be overtime. What about using one of those in-service days in April instead? Brawner explained that there will be district wide training during that in-service with presenters flying into Nome. So, the choices were narrowed considerably with that in mind and ultimately, the next best choice for a make-up day became Thursday, May 24, 2012. Yes, this extends the school year by one day - no, it shouldn't affect the graduation date for the Senior Class of 2012.

November Students of the Month

Carmen Russo, vice-principal of Nome Beltz Jr./Sr. High School, presented the November students of the month. Pauline Ahkvaluk was selected as the Jr. High's awardee and Kenna-Sue Contreras was selected as the Sr. High student of the month. Congratulations to both students and their parents!

Partner in Education

Lisa Leeper was recognized as a valued Partner in Education due to her continued work as the creator and leader of Lisa's Leepers, a jump rope class/club, at Nome Elementary School.

Danielle Sylvester was recognized as a valued Partner in Education due to her "diligent efforts on behalf of anti-tobacco education and mentoring for the 2011-2012 school year."

Nome Nanook wrestlers garnered the highest team GPA award at the recent Northern Conference wrestling meet.

Let there be LED light

Nome Common Council granted the NSEDC's Community Benefit Share Program of $100,000 to fund new, efficient LED lighting at the gym. Lights have been ordered and will be installed as quickly as possible. A public "thank you" to the Nome Common Council and NSEDC was extended by board members and Brawner.

Next meeting

The December 27 work session has been cancelled. The Nome Board of Education will meet again on Tuesday, January 10 and will include a superintendent evaluation in executive session.

ter and I played with our new toys all day long. We didn't even get tired because we were hyper. We had hot coco. Maybe that was what made us hyper. My mom got new clothes and my dad got Panthers stuff because he is a huge fan! We had a fun time together with our family. Merry Christmas! The End.

–Della Medlin

My best Christmas was when I went to Hawaii with my mom and dad. My mom is from Hawaii so we have lots of families there. My favorite memory from that Christmas was when my whole family and everyone was watching me open my presents. It made me feel so happy to be there with them. I remember getting a big blanket and pillow from my grandma. I remember that Santa brought me a Musketeer Girl with a fake sword and a mask and a cape. The cape makes it look like a dress. Under the cape is a skirt and she even had high heel boots. When you pull the mask off she looks like a princess. We even went to the beach. It is really really hot in Hawaii even at Christmas. It never snows except a little bit in the mountains. It was a great Christmas because I was with my family. I love my family all very

My favorite Christmas was when I was 5 years old. My mom, my dad, Devon, Dalton, Michael and I were there at our house. I was home opening presents with my family and I said I love you mom. My mom said I love you too. I said to my dad I love you dad. He said I love you too, Wotten! That's my nickname. I got the best present ever. It was a warm blanket from my grandma Edna. I had a great Christmas. I like that Christmas when I was 5. I will never forget it. It was the best

—Daniel Buffas

My favorite Christmas memories were when I was 6 years old. I was at my house because that's where I have all my Christmases. My mom and my dad were there and so were my dogs Patches and Patch. And plus Patch is Patches' baby. It was the best Christmas ever because I got a Toy Story 3 and Star Wars game for my DS IXL. I also got a Mario Vs. Donkey Kong for the DS. I also got a toy gun that was as long as my whole arm. I played those DS games for a long time. I still play those DS games because I need to get money to get more characters. I already got General Grevis but I want to get Darth Vader because he is cool. Bad but cool. I guess I already got Darth Maul but I really want Vader. That was the best Christmas ever. Merry Christmas!

–Andrew Nashalook

My favorite Christmas was when I was 6 years old. I was at my grandma's house. My whole family was there! We played all kinds of Christmas games at the school across the street. That was so fun! My friends and family were all there with me. We had all kinds of yummy snacks. My mom, dad, and two of my sisters Zoe and Ivory came at nighttime. They almost missed all of our fun Christmas games but they made it just in time. The presents I got that Christmas were those pillow pets, a nice lamp, money, a DVD, a doll Build-a-Bear and sunglasses. It was magical and I was so happy that Christmas day. We had a great dinner. We had peas, chicken and soup for dinner. It was delicious. That was the best Christmas ever.

–Grace Okleasik

My favorite Christmas was when I was 5 years old. I had Christmas at my auntie's. We had a whole lot of Christmas presents under our tree. I heard a stomping on the ground and all of the sudden I heard my mom tell us to get up because it was Christmas. I heard my brother Daniel screaming in the hallway because he was so excited. He screamed there are lots of Christmas presents under our tree! My sister Cortney asked him why he was screaming. He said that there were lots of presents for us to open. I got a puppy and a kitten for Christmas. Cortney picked up the puppy and I picked up the kitten. Daniel said he wanted to hold one. He held the kitten and it climbed all over him and crawled up on his head. He screamed to Cortney to get the kitten off of him. Daniel also got a huge toy gun that he couldn't even hold because it was so big! It was a good Christmas because I was with my family. Merry Christmas!

–Keri-Ann Russell

My favorite Christmas memories were when I got a Batmobile and Batman action figure from Santa. I also got a computer that had lots and lots of games. I could type letters and numbers on it too if I wanted. My mom and dad were there with me and so were Mycka, Sweetie, and Sugar. I played with my Batmobile and Batman all day long. I put Batman into the Batmobile and twisted the key to make it go real fast. It went by itself. I like Christmas time every year. Merry Christmas every-

-Michael Lockwood

My best Christmas memories were from last year. I woke up really early. So early. And I woke up my four cousins. We were all real happy. We were real hyper and excited. Santa brought me a spy camera and a big toy dump truck. I was so happy I got to have two root beer floats. Man that made me real happy and hyper. That was the best Christmas ever.

How to keep the doctor away in 2012

By Bob Lawrence, MD Alaska Family Doctor

You have heard it said, "An apple a day keeps the doctor away." The original 19th century version was somewhat more antagonistic to the medical profession: "Eat an apple before going to bed, and you'll make the doctor beg his bread."

While this statement may not be literally true, the principle it teaches is very important. The regular practice of healthy behaviors can protect a person from many preventable dis-

In fact there are several things you can do that will likely keep the doctor away. Here a few examples:

· Wash your hands. Infectious disease experts tell us that washing hands is the single best way to prevent the transmission of bacteria and viruses to others. Washing hands is especially important after preparing food, using the Saying it Sincerely The 11th Commandment!

Pastor Mike Christian, River of Life Assembly of God (A member of the Nome Ministerial Association)

"A new commandment I give unto you, that you love one another; as I have loved you, that you also love one another." John 13:34

Have you ever wondered why Jesus gave us this 11th commandment? Why didn't God include it in the original 10 that he gave to Moses?

The reason he didn't include it is very practical. He knew it would take an extra measure of the Holy Spirit to enable us to keep such a commandment. He waited until Jesus, (the greatest and most perfect expression of himself) came before he shared these words found in John's Gospel.

So, how does Jesus make it easier for us to love one another? Here's how: • Jesus reveals how much God loves us. Would you be willing to purposely send your only son to a place where you knew he would be tortured and killed?

Through Jesus we can see God's overwhelming love for us.

• Jesus lifts the condemnation of guilt and judgment. The Bible says, "He who believes in him is not condemned" (John 3:17). Isn't it exciting to know that when you and I ask Jesus to forgive our sins, that he does just that and we are cleansed by his precious saving blood? Jesus sets us "free" from sin! And in doing so, he removes the condemnation that accompanied it. When we realize the beauty of this freedom, we should also understand that it is not our place to condemn those around us, but to love them.

• Jesus fills us with the Holy Spirit! Jesus was God, but he was also filled with God. The Holy Spirit manifested the loving nature of God through Jesus. Jesus said, "And I will ask the Father, and he will give you another counselor to be with you forever – the Spirit of Truth" (John 14:16-17a). When the Holy Spirit abides in your heart you will love others as God loves them.

It is our God-given responsibility to love people as God loves them. Regardless of how critical or difficult a person may be, as children of God, we are to love them as our Lord loves them. As we obey this word from our Lord, we will bring glory and honor to his name and show others that the love of God dwells within us. So, go out and spread the love of God today and everyday. There are many who just need someone to show them his love today!

 Increase physical activity. Studies show that a third of adults do not perform regular physical exercise or manual work. This is why some people seem to age faster than others. Exercise slows the aging process, because the human body is designed to repair and build up parts that are being used. On the other hand, the body is like a machine that gets rusty, starts making funny noises, and begins to leak strange fluids if left sedentary for too long. The American Heart Association and other medical organizations recommend 30 minutes of some form of physical activity daily.

· Monitor your calorie intake. The best way to maintain a healthy weight or body mass index (BMI) is to control the number of calories you consume. Recent data shows that, on average, women consume 22 percent more calories, and men consume 10 percent more calories than either did back in 1971. This is why the nation has become increasingly obese and therefore less healthy. Excess fat leads to heart disease, cancer, diabetes,

Part of Friday's short-term resolution included that supervision of the Community Health Aides has been shifted from Barbara Collins to Louis Murphy, the director of Emergency Services. It is not clear if Collins was reassigned to other duties. "This is an internal personnel issue," said CEO Deven Parlikar, in an interview with The Nome Nugget.

Without going into the details, Parlikar said this is a systemic issue that needs a long-term solution. He said that he has met with the health aides on Friday afternoon and that a dialogue has begun. "I want to get to the root of the issue and we are working with them [health aides] to bring this to a resolution," Parlikar said. "For now, we reassigned them to work with Louis Murphy until we figure out the long-term leadership," Parlikar said. Parlikar is at his home in San Diego until after the Christmas Holidays and said the health aide situation is at the top of this priority list to tackle in the New Year.

The proclamation by the Community Health Aide Association was made public on Thursday, Dec. 15. It lists grievances that have fallen on deaf ears at the corporate level, the health aides say. The proclamation makes severe allegations that NSHC's division of Community Health Services failed "to recognize and provide needed care for critical incident care and post traumatic stress syndrome resulting in more resignations, self-medication and suicide.'

Besides demands to remove the supervisors in Nome from their positions, the health aides ask to reinstate the health aides that were forced to resign because of unfair labor practices, to rehire health aides who committed minor infractions in the past and to hire two relief health aides for each clinic when the regular health aides are on leave or in training. The proclamation finally demands to cease the "policy of retaliation against our members for voicing our grievances.'

Community Health Aide Association president Sharon Johnson was not available for comment and vicepresident Thomas Nayoukpuk also declined to comment on the matter.

Katherine Margret Humphrey October 17, 1969 -December 15, 2011

Katherine died peacefully at her home on December 15 after a relatively short but difficult battle with pancreatic cancer. During her battle, she was under the loving and wonderful care of Providence Hospice and her husband Jack Omelak, mother Vera Anne and father Roland Humphrey. Katherine was born in Waco, Texas, and being the daughter of a United Methodist Minister and a career US Army Chaplain, she lived many places including Ft. Worth and Taylor, TX, San Francisco, Ft. Monmouth, NJ, Ft. Sill, OK, and Frankfurt, Germany.

Katherine Margret Humphrey

A proud member of the Kituwa Band of Cherokee Indians, she attended Haskell Indian Nations University in Lawrence, Kansas where she first met her husband in 1992. After earning her Associate's Degree at Haskell, she enrolled at the University of Kansas where she earned a B.A. in Environmental Policy and then a Master's Degree in Indigenous People's Studies. Soon after, she became the first Linguistics Doctoral Candidate at the University of Oklahoma in Norman, OK. She admired her mentors, Dr. Chuck Haines and Dr. Dan Wildcat of Haskell Indian Nations University, and Doctors Raymond and Cynthia Periotti at the University of Kansas.

Her passion and dedication for the Tsalagi Language and the cultural traditions of the Cherokees, especially the Stomp Dance traditions, were the activities she loved dearly. She enjoyed learning and teaching others, especially children, to weave baskets, make Cherokee stickball, and other arts and crafts. She also learned to make ironwood bows. One of her greatest achievements was receiving her traditional stomp dance turtle shakers and she would dance proudly at the Stokes Stomp ground in honor of her elder Crosslin Smith. While at the University of Oklahoma she worked with Euchee elders to document the Euchee lan-

She also worked for the Cherokee Nation in Tahlequah Oklahoma as a distance Cherokee Language Instructor. Although she loved the traditions and ceremonies of the lower 48 tribes such as pow-wow, sweat lodge, and other native religious services like the annual Sun Dance Ceremony, she moved to Alaska in 2006 and immediately involved herself in Alaska Native customs.

She loved the outdoors. She enjoyed fishing, ice fishing, hunting, and crabbing during her vacations to Nome. She loved to cook, and loved preparing for the holidays. She loved her snowmachine, and could hardly wait to camp out with her friends and her beloved dog, Girl. She also loved hockey and was a faithful Aces fan, but one of her greatest joys was volunteering her time in the Iditarod at both Anchorage and Nome. She became friends with many of the racers and often volunteered for the difficult and less glamorous jobs most others would not. She adored spending time walking her dog at University Lake.

Until her death she had been working for the Alaska Native Tribal Health Consortium in Anchorage as a Clinical Project Manager. Some of her closest friends were people she met in the Al-anon and OA chapters in Anchorage. Her deep gratitude for these relations cannot be expressed enough. One of the last things she was fortunate to experience was when her house was full of nearly 30 people watching two of Alaska's up and coming Native Youth Olympic competitors demonstrate the techniques of many of Alaska's Native Games. She watched in awe from her bed for nearly four hours surrounded by close family and friends.

Northwest Arctic Leadership Team

The Northwest Arctic Leadership Team held their annual summit in Anchorage on December 14 and 15 at the Dena'ina Center. NWALT is a partnership among Maniilaq Association, NANA Regional Corporation, the Northwest Arctic Borough, and the Northwest Arctic Borough School District that collaborates to maximize their resources and reduce duplication of efforts to address issues affecting the people of northwest Alaska while honoring and perpetuating their Inupiat cultural heritage. NWALT was created to have the above entities come together and work in unity, respect, honesty, cooperation, and productive cooperation. The Summit is a time for each of the NWALT organizations to hear from and express their priorities for northwest Alaska to the Governor, the Alaska State Legislature, State Agencies, the Congressional Delegation, federal agencies and other organizations about their focus for the next year.

Some of the concerns outlined in the summit include reducing rural energy costs through alternative and renewable energy and energy efficiency, development of a needed deep-water port, support for the Northwest Arctic Borough Public Safety Plan, legislation on naturally occurring asbestos, and their need for a Kotzebue clinic to improve outpatient care in the service area.

I'd like to commend the staff of this unique organization for their hard work and effective strategy to address their priorities for the next year and build partnership in these efforts. I think NWALT is a great example of what boroughs can achieve when they come together and address issues affecting their region. This organization has been successful with their cooperative and professional relationships with state agencies. Our boroughs and regional organizations can achieve more when they come ogether and voice their concerns as a whole.

Northern Waters Task Force Submits Recommendations

The Northern Waters Task Force recently met last week to submit recommendations and findings to the Alaska Legislature next month. In 2010, NWTF was created to facilitate regional coordination and State of Alaska leadership in the ongoing development of the United States' policies related to the opening of Arctic marine transportation routes, national security, and resource development.

Since implementation, the task force has held hearings in the communities of Barrow, Nome, Bethel, Unalaska, Kotzebue, and Anchorage. By meeting in these regions,

Some people find it helpful to view calories as fuel. It takes about a mile of brisk walking to burn 100 calories. Therefore drinking a pop with 140 calories requires a mile and a half of walking to burn off whereas a glass of water, at zero calories, is just as refreshing and requires no extra work. Research shows that people make healthier choices when they think about how much exercise is required to work off a given food item.

• Get your Vitamin D. Vitamin D supplementation has been shown to reduce common colds and flulike illnesses, as well as prevent falls in elderly persons. Vitamin D is sometimes called the "sunshine vitamin" because our skin makes vitamin D from sunlight exposure. But during the dark days of winter when sunlight is scarce, it is important to get vitamin D from alternate sources like salmon, seal oil, or Vitamin D3 supplements. In general, 4 to 8 oz serving of salmon has 1,000 units of vitamin D. Adults in the far north can safely consume 2,000 units of vitamin D3 daily.

• Stop smoking. According the Center for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC), tobacco use is the number one cause of preventable diseases including heart disease, stroke, and cancer. There is no medication that is as powerful at promoting a long healthy life as the decision to quit smoking. Many people in the Norton Sound region have given up smoking in the last year. Why not make a decision in the coming year to join this group and go smoke free?

Katherine taught folks to enjoy our surroundings and actions no matter how simple they may be, to work constantly toward the good things in life, to show respect and love for others, and most important, her persistence towards identifying and practicing the principles of living a good life. Folks learned much from Katherine's patience towards others and her ability to act with critical and practical rationale. She never settled for less than her best attempt in all that she did.

She is survived by her husband Jack Omelak whom she met at Haskell, her parents, Roland and Vera Anne Humphrey of Lenexa,

KS, her brother Colin Humphrey and wife Sarah and their two sons Nikolai and Julian of Overland Park, KS, her aunt and uncle Margaret and Jack Wade of Paris, AR, her two cousins, Bill Covington, of Frankfurt, Germany, and Jay Covington, also of Paris, AR, and her uncle and aunt Roger and Camille Humphrey of Dallas, TX. She is also survived by her mother-in-law Phoebe Ann Omelak, her nephews and nieces Richard and Vivian Pomeroy, Kalani Pakileata, her sister-in-law Christine Omelak, brother-in-law Michael Jerue, all of Anchorage, and her nieces Robin, Rebecca, and Rachel Taylor of British Columbia, Canada. She also adored Charlene and Greg Drowningbear and their children Jahonhi, Goga, and Suyeta of Tahlequah, OK, who treated her as their sister. She loved all of her nieces and nephews very much and continually sacrificed in order to ensure they enjoyed themselves.

Funeral services were at the First United Methodist Church in Anchorage, Alaska on Saturday the 17th of December. Her ashes will be scattered at Army Peak in Nome so she can overlook her favorite place to fish and pick berries. She will also be placed in Muskogee, Oklahoma, where she will be brought back to her family allotment to be with her many relatives. In lieu of flowers, the family suggests memorial donations be made to Providence Hospice 3435 E. Tudor Rd. Anchorage, Alaska 99508.

the task force members were able to seek guidance and feedback from the residents of these regions, which are most likely affected by impacts from increased activity in the Arctic.

With the continued loss of sea ice in the Arctic and the increase for worldwide search for natural resources, Alaska's Arctic's future is a prime location for both opportunities and challenges related to marine shipping, mineral extraction, oil and gas development, fisheries, tourism, cultural preservation, and other activities.

The NWTF broke down the recommendation in the following categories: Arctic Governance

Arctic Planning and Infrastructure Investment

Oil and Gas Development

Arctic Fisheries

Marine Transportation

Arctic Research

During the recent meetings, I was glad to learn the task force will be recommending the need for more icebreakers to assist our coastal communities when situations arise, such as the recent fuel shortage Nome may face this winter. Also, with the teamwork of this task force, I understand many of the recommendations involve responsible development and stewardship of our resources with much respect to our local communities that will be affected by advancement of natural and modern development. A noteworthy recommendation that will be submitted is to have Alaska be a valuable partner with the federal government on Arctic issues. The NWTF recommends the U.S. and Alaska, working both together and independently to seek more cooperation with other Arctic governments. Local residents should have full participation in deciding these Arctic issues.

All in all, I think the NWTF members worked very hard and I'd like to acknowledge Representative Joule and his staff for their hard work coordinating much of the travel and hearings. Their work is very much appreciated.

Along with the NWTF members, I would like to thank the many communities and people throughout the state who welcomed task force members and took the time to help us better understand their communities and the Arctic issues being faced. Additionally, we'd like to express our gratitude to the many accomplished specialist2s who addr2essed the task force on their areas

NOAA declares unusual mortality event for ringed seals

By Diana Haecker

The National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration declared an unusual mortality event in response to a mystery disease that affects ringed and bearded seals and possibly walrus.

The disease that caused skin lesions, hair loss and lethargic behavior in seals this summer and fall is still a mystery to scientists. NOAA officials say that the declaration of an "unusual mortality event" triggers a new level of expert investigation into the cause of the disease. A decision by the U.S. Fish & Wildlife Service on walrus is pending.

A Working Group on Marine Mammal Unusual Mortality Events determined that the situation warrants the declaration of an unusual mortality event, UME for short, and recommended that NOAA issue the declaration. The North Slope Borough's wildlife management department took the lead in preparing the evidence paperwork for a UME declaration. Collaborators included the federal U.S. Fish & Wildlife agency, NOAA and the stranded marine mammals network program with the National Marine Fisheries Service, Gay Sheffield with the UAF Marine Advisory Program in Nome, pathologist Kathy Burek and Steven Raverty with the Canadian Dept. of Fisheries and Oceans.

So far, 60 dead and 75 diseased seals have been reported in Alaska, but reports of diseased seals and walrus are also coming in from Russia and Canada. USFWS biologist Joel Garlich- Miller confirmed that skin lesions and open sores were also seen on walrus. A large group of about 20,000 walrus hauled out this fall on a barrier island near Point Lay and Garlich-Miller conducted a carcass survey on 28 animals that were found dead. Most of them, he said, were calves and yearlings that showed signs of being trampled to death, but some also had skin lesions. "The cause and significance of this disease for walrus is still unclear," Garlich-Miller said. He added that the disease doesn't seem to be widespread in walrus, but seeing the same symptoms in ice seals, USFWS wants to say actively involved and engaged with the working group Dr. Teri Rowles, NOAA's national marine mammal health and stranding response program coordinator, said in a press conference on nary Diagnostic Lab in British Columbia and said that the patchy hair loss in ice seals has been investigated for nearly ten years, but the symptoms with this disease include open hunters and researchers trying to find out what is happening.

Given that seals and walrus are an important subsistence food source in northwest Alaska, subsistence users

Photo by North Slope Borough Department of Wildlife Management LESIONS— With the UME declaration, more resources are going to be devoted to study the causes of the mysterious disease in seals and walrus that causes skin lesions on the animals' flippers. The photo was taken on August 11, 2011 near Barrow.

Tuesday morning that the UME declaration means that they will develop an investigative team, and continue to ramp up the level of cooperation between Native organizations, local governments and state, federal and international agencies. "The UME declaration will provide us with additional expertise and we will be able to use a fund to do more in-depth diagnostics," Rowles said. "The working group will take the information and begin to target where we go with the diagnostics and the data collection. The UME allows us to target resources as needed."

Dr. Stephen Raverty, veterinary pathologist and working group member, works at the Provincial Veterilesions around the eyes and between the hind flippers. Raverty said that samples were tested for 18 known viral pathogens, but all test results were negative. According to NOAA scientists, necropsies and laboratory tests also found fluid in the lungs, white spots on the liver and abnormal growths in the brain. Some seals showed undersized lymph nodes, which could indicate compromised immune systems.

Dr. Raphaela Stimmelmayr, wildlife veterinarian and research biologist with the North Slope Borough Department of Wildlife Management stressed that the investigation so far has been a highly collaborative effort between local are very concerned. Until more is known, the scientists recommend using good hygiene practices when butchering animals and not to take sick animals. They still encourage the public to report sightings of dead or diseased marine mammals.
